

MY STORY... HOW I BECAME AN EDUCATOR?

When I was little, my mom observed my habit of writing her an apology letter every time I made a mistake. So one day, she brought me a journal and asked me to write everything I'd feel in that diary. And that's how I began to write at the age of seven. I am eternally grateful to my mom, for instilling in me the art of expression through writing.

And I was about 10 years old when my father saw me with a book in my hand talking to few vacant chairs. He figured I was teaching a group of imaginary students. He saw in me a spark to teach. So the very next day, he bought a blackboard, handed me a piece of chalk and gave me the advice for life 'to teach is to learn twice'.

Growing up closely watching my English Teacher in school left a firm and lasting impression on my mind, and I knew I was going to follow in my teacher's footsteps. Being inclined to teaching from a very young age, I find it as a rewarding profession, which allows me to create a difference in the lives of others and pursuing my passion for a lifetime.

Ever since I started teaching, I have been passionate about my commitment to three things:

- To let the students know WHAT and WHY they will learn as it lays the foundation for concepts, skills and information.
- Establishing a learner-centred environment where a student's desire and ability to learn can work most effectively
- Instilling a sense of self-worth and confidence among all students

I design positive approaches and proactive interventions advancing learner engagement; academic achievement; cognitive development; and social behavioural and communication improvements.

“I teach to inspire and enrich every student's life”

-Manpreet

