

Kara Foster's Clear Vision for Holly Springs

What if our town was easier to navigate, safer for our kids, and designed with the people who live here in mind, not just the cars passing through?

For Our Kids: Safer Streets, Stronger Community

Picture shaded sidewalks where kids can walk or bike safely to school. Parks and greenways close to every neighborhood. Streets that slow traffic and invite connection—not frustration.

Our children deserve more freedom and fewer car rides. They should grow up in a place where it's normal to play outside, wave to neighbors, and feel safe walking home.

For Residents: Less Traffic, Smarter Growth, More Say

A lot of us are frustrated by what's happening: rapid development, worsening traffic, and the sense that decisions are being made without community input.

But town leadership can make a difference by:

- Prioritizing walkable neighborhoods and connected greenways
- Requiring developers to include parks, sidewalks, and public spaces
- Reducing traffic congestion through better planning and alternative transit
- Putting long-term quality of life ahead of short-term growth

Let's Take the First Step - Together

This isn't about doing everything at once. It's about starting with smart, simple decisions that make daily life better for everyone.

When we design our town to support safe movement, social connection, and green space—we build a community that works for kids, families, and older adults alike.

Let's stop settling for development that only adds cars and crowds. Let's build a Holly Springs that adds value to our lives.

Ready to see what's possible?

There are towns across the U.S. already doing this. They're safer, healthier, and more enjoyable to live in, not because of luck, but because of leadership.

Let's bring that leadership here.
