

When You Call My Name

Come inside, nobody's home, lights are on but you're still alone
See the sun, it fades away, yearning for its warm embrace

Cast aside, ones you denied, what could have been left unrealized
You were born of virtue and grace, surrendered fate for second place

When you call my name, I will be wasting away again
When you call my name, I will be taking from you again
Still you take my hand, lift me up I'll stand
Then you call my name and I will be yours

Try to hide mistakes that were made, replacing fault by displacing blame
Settled for the one that was safe, never found a common place

Turn to see all that was lost, sacrifice no matter the cost
Broken dreams, unopened doors, would you make the choice once more?

When you call my name, I will be wasting away again
When you call my name, I will be taking from you again
Still you take my hand, lift me up I'll stand
Then you call my name and I will be yours

Still you try to find the good in the broken, only to be shattered once again

When you call my name, I will be wasting away again
When you call my name, I will be taking from you again
Still you take my hand, lift me up I'll stand
Then you call my name and I will be yours
