

Review by Rebecca Wells Phillips, author of “Hating Self,” “Loving Self” (as Boo Black), “Butterfly Blossoms” and the upcoming “Dragonfly Passions” (as Rachel Bleu) and “Hurricane Helene: Resiliency During the Storm” (as Rebecca Wells Phillips). She can be found at: <https://rebeccawellsphillips.com>

The book cover immediately caught my eye because of the beautiful graphics and mention of The Hunger Games. The idea of using nano-bots was most intriguing because of my previous knowledge of similar technology used for destroying cancer cells. I was shocked when the author mentioned “Covid-28”! Character development was superb and i finished the book feeling as though i personally knew the main characters, Davina and Mallory. Jennifer’s writing style held my attention by creating a mental picture of the events. At times, i was holding my breath in anticipation of what would be happening next. Completing the book in three days, i found this fictional journey exhilarating in its representations. I would rate it a 10 out of 10 for originality, flow/pace, and character development. I cant wait to read Two in Vermillion May Die.