Louise Phillips

From start to finish, drawing is about wanting to know more. Persistent questions call for earnest investigation. I make inquiries on paper with ink and paint. I draw and through drawing I have many discoveries. I find answers and learn about people, places, and things. Drawing is a practice of inquiry. My drawings are documents of making and discovery.

I am unable to fully explain why, but likely because of the way my drawings come about, those who see them often have questions. Maybe that is as it should be. Inquiry begins again.

How and what I draw come out of life experience and curiosity. I am indebted to many for their wisdom and interest.
