of deceased victims shall have the right to participate in these proceedings.

3. In cases of serious offenses to a human right, the right to the truth requires:

a. "the procedural determination of the most complete historical truth as possible";

b. that the state does "not invoke the statute of limitations, the non-retroactivity of criminal law or the ne bis in idem principle to decline its duty to investigate and punish those responsible";

c. that states shall enact no amnesties in cases of serious human rights violations. This prohibition shall extend to amnesties benefitting both sides of a domestic conflict, and those enacted by democratic governments and ratified via referendum.

d. This investigation shall be initiated ex officio. The state shall also provide immediately sufficient and overall protection measures regarding any act of coercion, intimidation and threat towards witnesses and investigators.

4. States have the obligation to repair the victim's violation of human rights. Reparations must be comprehensive; they cannot be restricted to the payment of compensation.
