

Although this experiment with the federal control of local public schools has gone on for half a century now, it has failed. We need to stop treating children like guinea pigs in some social engineering laboratory and start embracing children as human beings to be supported and inspired to achieve their own dreams and aspirations.

Why end the US Department of Education?

United States Parents Involved in Education (USPIE) is a nonprofit, nonpartisan, nationwide coalition of state leaders focused on restoring local control of education by eradicating federal intrusion.

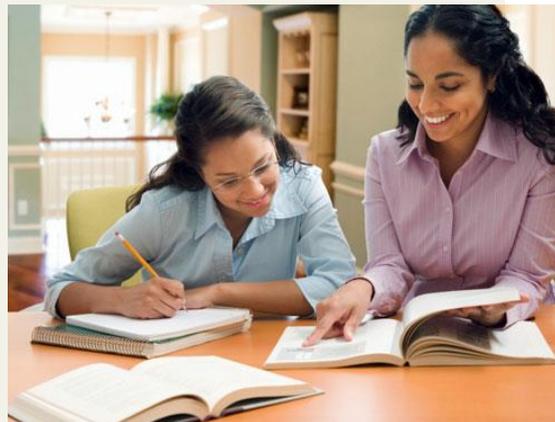

STOP FED ED is a campaign led by parents, taxpayers and educators committed to returning control of education to parents and local communities. Closing the U.S. Department of Education and ending federal control of education are the first steps.

The fight against Common Core has exposed the failures of those trying to force a federally-based one size fits all curriculum on states and local school districts. There are several laws that forbid the federal government from dictating curriculum, and yet we are seeing a rapid decline in classroom choice and education freedom.

So why has the U.S. Department of Education existed since 1979?

Because it is about control and not about children. Control through federal dollars that have bribed and blackmailed states as manifested by the original Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (ESEA). It has also been about pushing the private-public partnership agenda that has led to Crony Capitalism proliferating in toxic testing and data collection on students.

We now have a golden opportunity to STOP FED ED by ending the U.S. Department of Education and returning local control and funding to the states where it belongs. Join us in contacting Congress about bills that close the U.S. Department of Education and end all federal education mandates. Visit our website, uspie.org, to review current legislation.
