Legal Tips for Police Officers will be offered at MTU 13 presented by Judge Daniel Shanes. This one-day class is relevant to all branches of law enforcement. Everyone will get information out of this.

Police work is difficult, and an officer's uncertainty about the law can make the job even harder when dealing with issues like search and seizure, interviewing witnesses, or just investigating possible criminal behavior. This course will provide legal guidance on these and many other topics, so that evidence police officers obtain will be admissible at trial and the officers will be able to avoid civil liability for themselves and their departments as they go about their departments as they go about their law enforcement duties. Join Judge Shanes for a practical discussion for important legal issues that currently impact law enforcement professionals.

- Avoiding the need to give a suspect Miranda warnings
- Using the "knock and talk" doctrine to question people
- The latest developments regarding vehicle searches
- Benefits for officers and agencies from obtaining search warrants
- How a consensual encounter differs from a person being stopped by police
- Relying upon an anonymous 911 caller to conduct a vehicle stop
- New developments in the law regarding consent searches.
- Searches incident to arrest and U.S. Supreme Court decisions on cell phones
