A Woman With True 'Drive'

By Kate Walsh

To most people, Cindy Leavings would appear to be a devoted stay-at-home mom to her two young sons, Jacob and Joshua. And Billy Leavings would seem to be the talented, hardworking owner of QualTech Automotive. While accurate, those descriptions don't tell the whole story.

The truth?

"When people meet Cindy, the first thing they ask is if she works in the business," husband Billy laughs. "I have always encouraged her to say jokingly that she performs brake jobs! She's very involved and passionate about our business. She's a driving force in the success of QualTech Automotive. She even came up with the name."

Cindy had an impressive career even before choosing to raise a family and focus on their business. After graduating from Texas State with a degree in Health Care Administration, she sold managed care contracts, worked as a pharmaceutical sales representative and contracted hospitals to provide environmentally sustainable solutions.

Leaving her successful career to start a family was always the right decision, but it was not the easiest, Cindy admits. Cindy's role as Vice President at QualTech Automotive helps to give her the fulfillment of professional life while still allowing her to focus on family.

QualTech's popularity has grown so quickly it has resulted in the recent opening of their second location. "Everything from the paint in the stores to the design of our logo has been the result of Cindy's brilliant touch," says Billy. "While we were looking for a property to open our second location, I can think of at least two locations that we didn't purchase—all because of Cindy's analysis and input. So, I guess she really does do brake jobs," laughs Billy.

Cindy's involvement also means that Billy and his team at both locations have a more enlightened understanding when it comes to providing a quality experience for all women who trust QualTech Automotive with their car care. "It's important to have a female perspective," says Billy. "It's made all the difference in our success."
