

CENTURION K9 PROBIOTICS

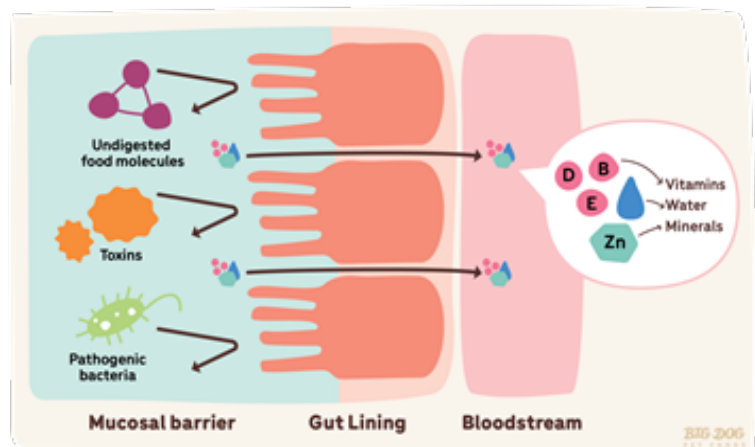

put the power of billions to work for you and your animals

Recent scientific studies found that as much as 80% of your dog's immune system is in their gut. Surprised? You're not alone. Most dog owners are just discovering the importance of probiotics for their beloved friend's health. Probiotics ensure your dog lives longer and healthier. Who doesn't want that? Keep reading to discover everything you need to know to give your pup the best care for their gut and overall health. To begin with, we've all heard about the importance of probiotics for humans, but how does gut health impact dogs? What health risks, problems, and diseases stem from an unhealthy gut microbiome in dogs?

Problems linked to Poor Gut Health

Dogs with poor gut health (Leaky Gut) are at greater risk of developing various diseases. Possible diseases and conditions include:

- digestive disorders
- allergies
- skin rashes
- irritations
- autoimmune diseases
- diarrhea or gas
- yeast infections
- biting and licking skin
- emotional health
- behavior issues
- low energy levels
- excessive body odor
- bad breath
- dull coat

With so many possible health problems, diseases, and severe conditions directly related to gut health, it's imperative to provide your dog with a daily high quality probiotic. Getting your dog started on probiotics is straightforward once you understand what you need to look for in a probiotic. This ensures your pup gets the full benefits of a probiotic. The benefits and advantages of using a probiotic far outweigh the long term cost, both monetarily and physically, of not providing a daily supplement.

Additional Essential Nutritional Advantages of Probiotics

Studies found that dogs fed probiotics had an improved ability to absorb essential nutrients and had better small intestine health than those dogs not given a probiotic supplement.

These same studies also showed that dogs supplemented with probiotics had a higher production of beneficial bacteria, which increased their overall health and immunity.
