

CENTURION PROBIOTICS

has a secret for you....

When Are Probiotics Most Used?

Probiotics are most often prescribed for maintaining a “desirable intestinal microbial balance,” according to the Merck Veterinary Manual. When an animal is stressed or sick, the balance between the healthy and disease causing microbes may be disrupted. This can lead to diarrhea, gas, cramping, and bad breath. Some of the triggers for such digestive disorders include:

- Infection or bacterial imbalance
- Stress or changes that cause emotional stress, such as boarding, moving, or losing a home, can result in colitis.
- Diet: This can include abrupt changes in the menu or eating food that is spoiled or that just doesn't agree with the dog.
- Old age
- Medications: Antibiotics and long-term steroids are known culprits in causing diarrhea by killing good bacteria.

It might come as no surprise that your dirt-loving canine best friend is covered in bacteria (a fact we choose to ignore when asking for slobbery kisses). Family members share a microbiome with their dogs. Dogs are more likely to have similar microbiomes to their owners than other people. People with dogs also have a higher likelihood of sharing microbes with their cohabitants than those without pets. Petting and hugging your dog insures you share their microbiome. Be sure your pet shares a healthier microbiome with you and your family - Feed Centurion K9 Probiotics.
