THE FACE OF Best Voted Museum

Since 1934, family-owned classic car clubhouse showcases only the best

It's a passion carried forward from the days of Cadillac V16s, Packards and Speedsters. Nearly 100 years after his father Otto started Drager's Harley-Davidson in 1934, Jeri Drager has transformed the business into a thriving, vibrant showcase of classic cars and bikes – a business that quite literally makes people stop and turn around on the highway to get a better look.

"We have a very large collection of automobile toys, all sorts of things and a lot to see," Jeri said. But the memorabilia is not for sale. "Lots of people want to buy all of those different things hanging on the walls or in showcases but I tell them no. I tell them if I sold it, the next person that came in the door wouldn't get to see it."

It's not just a shop, it's a museum.

The oldest motor is a 1916 Harley-Davidson V-twin. Next up, a 1918 Excelsior that hasn't run since 1965. And the collection keeps growing.

Drager, his son Andrew, and occasionally his granddaughter Jannah operate Drager's International Classic Sales, more affectionately known as Drager's Clubhouse. They have more than 100 motorcycles on display, and a plethora of classic cars kept in near-mint condition.

Located just off Interstate 5 in Burlington, its origins can be traced back to Aberdeen, before moving to Bremerton in 1940. In 1950, Jeri and his family moved to Seattle and his parents continued to operate the shop. Jeri graduated high school in 1960 and joined the family business full-time.

Ten years later, he bought his first classic car – a 1935 Packard Super Eight four-door sedan with dual side mounts – and then four others, including a custom 1954 Corvette that had been modified with a V8 engine.

"It is one of the few cars I regret selling," Jeri lamented.

In 1986, he bought a piece of property on 49th and Aurora Avenue. It wasn't very big, Jeri said, but he could fit about six cars inside and about 15 cars in the lot on the south side of the building. He and his wife Joan operated it together. "We made a great team," Jeri said.

Drager's International stayed there until 2000, when he bought a 20,000 square-foot building in Shoreline.

In 2020, a California company made him an offer on the property. "out of the clear blue." And at the same time, a good friend let him know someone wanted to sell his building in Burlington and retire, Jeri recalled.

Jeri not only purchased that building, but the one across the street, too.

"The clubhouse really turned out extremely well," he said. "It was a great place to display all the antiques ... I can remember in the beginning, we had all sorts of room and we've now filled it full."

Car clubs visit frequently; the clubhouse can accommodate more than 200 people for an event, so the facility makes for a good rentable venue. There's a stage, sound and video system. It's even got a kitchen area, so catering can be arranged.

Customers can count on two things: quality and care.

"I like nice," Jeri said. "We work hard to make sure that the clubhouse is clean and picked up. That looks good."

He only takes in the best of the best – if a potential car needs paint, he won't even look at it. "I want nice, good-looking cars in great shape and that's the way we try to keep the building looking," he said.

Jeri said he's had more than one person tell him they like his clubhouse better than the LeMay - America's Car Museum in Tacoma.

"Most everyone that comes in for the first time can't believe what all they're seeing and how well it's kept," he said. It's not just the cars, after all, it's everything adorning the walls and display cases.

Jeri thanked the community members who voted his business "Best Classic Car Sales" and "Best Museum."

"There is plenty to see," he said. "As one person said, 'Jeri has one of everything.' Come and see for yourself."

THE FACE OF # Classic Car Sales

The Face of Drager's International Classic Sales is a long-established, family-run classic vehicle dealer and enthusiast destination based in Burlington, Washington. Founded in 1934 by Otto Drager and now operated by his son Jeri Drager, the company has grown from a traditional Seattle-area classic car enterprise into a unique automotive showroom and social hub affectionately known as Drager's Clubhouse.

Drager's specializes in the sale of classic cars, trucks, and motorcycles and caters to collectors and enthusiasts from around the world. The Clubhouse blends the charm of a traditional showroom with the atmosphere of a private garage museum: it features expansive outside parking, indoor displays of memorabilia, and amenities that make it feel like a "dream garage" for classic vehicle lovers.

The facility is filled with thousands of collectible items — from vintage motorcycles (some dating back as early as 1918) to porcelain signs, neon displays, and even themed exhibit areas like an Evel Knievel display. A two-post lift is installed onsite, allowing vehicles to be inspected, cleaned, and photographed from every angle, including the underside, which is especially valuable for buyers and consignors.

Drager's primarily operates by appointment, reflecting its focus on personalized service and detailed attention for each visitor. While casual walk-ins may occur, prospective customers and collectors are encouraged to call ahead to schedule their visit.

As Jeri Drager puts it: "We have a great location that I call Drager's Clubhouse — it's every guy's dream garage with ample outside parking.... the facility is like a museum with thousands of things on display." This quote encapsulates the passion behind the business, which bridges automotive commerce with collector culture.

Whether you're a seasoned collector or a casual fan of automotive history, Drager's offers an immersive and curated experience that celebrates vintage vehicles and the stories they hold.
