Servant Leadership

Marines and Associate Members,

Servant leadership is more than a management style—it is a mindset rooted in humility, selflessness, and commitment to others. For organizations like Detachment 1485, servant leadership reflects the very values that strengthen our mission, our membership, and our impact within the community.

At its core, servant leadership means placing the needs of others before personal recognition or gain. A servant leader leads by example, supports the team, and works to ensure that every member feels valued, empowered, and respected. It is not about rank, title, or authority—it is about service. This philosophy aligns closely with the traditions and values we carried during our military service: honor, courage, commitment, and taking care of those beside us. Within our detachment, servant leadership can be seen in the members who volunteer their time at fundraising events, mentor new members, support veterans in need, assist with community outreach, or simply step forward when help is needed without being asked. These actions may seem small individually, but together they form the foundation of a strong and united organization.

True servant leaders understand that success is never accomplished alone. Every event we host, every veteran we support, every scholarship, ceremony, or community program we participate in is possible because members choose to serve one another and work together toward a greater purpose. When leaders focus on lifting others up, encouraging participation, and building trust, the entire detachment benefits.

Servant leadership also inspires future generations. Our involvement with youth programs, community initiatives, and veteran outreach demonstrates to others what leadership through service truly looks like. It shows that leadership is not about being in front—it is about being willing to carry part of the load for someone else.

As members of Detachment 1485, each of us has the opportunity to practice servant leadership every day. Whether through volunteering, mentoring, supporting fellow Marines and veterans, or contributing ideas and effort toward the betterment of the detachment, every act of service matters.

When we lead with humility, integrity, and a willingness to serve, we strengthen not only our detachment, but also the community and veterans we proudly represent.

Semper Fidelis,
Sal Cenicacelaya Commandant Det 1485

*A message from Senior
Vice Commandant
Charles Rooth*

As we gathered this past Memorial Day, let us carry the memory of the fallen forward—not as a burden, but as a torch. Let the lives they lived and the sacrifices they made remind us of what we stand for and who we are capable of being. Let their courage call us to live with more purpose, more gratitude, and more compassion for one another.

We are the living testament to their sacrifices. Every freedom we exercise, every morning we wake up on our own soil, every moment we share with the people we love—these are the gifts bought by their service and sealed by their devotion. We owe them nothing less than our very best.

So, wherever you are and however you choose to honor them, do so with a full heart. Speak their names. Share their stories. Hold their families a little closer. And when the day is done, carry them with you—because the greatest tribute we can offer the fallen is to live a life worthy of the freedom they died to protect. They are not forgotten. They never will be.
