Logline: Your Kind of Love

For Sam and Lily, it was biscuits and gravy, it was when he would take her for a twirl in the kitchen when she least expected it. It's when he would gently hold her face with both hands and with his deep voice he would whisper in her ear "Sweet Girl," and it still made her blush and when date night was gazing at the same moon two thousand miles apart. That was "Your Kind Of love".

Synopsis: Your Kind of Love

For Sam and Lily, it's biscuits and gravy at midnight and when he still takes her for a twirl in the kitchen when she least expects it. It's when he gently holds her face with both hands and with his deep voice whispers in her ear "Sweet Girl," and it still makes her blush. And the precious memories of when he was still on the road he would call and say, "Can you see the moon, sugar?" and date night was gazing at the same moon two thousand miles apart. "Now you don't feel so far away" he'd say. That was "Your Kind Of love".

But when they were young, Sam and Lily were like two wild Mustangs back in the day despite all of their crazy adventures and escaping grave danger hundreds of times, Lily was still convinced it was the laughter that was the key to their epic forty year love affair, you see he made her laugh every single day even during some pretty tough times.

But lately Lily sensed something has been tugging at Sam's soul. She thought maybe he just really missed being out on the road in the big truck now that he was retired, She sits him down, pours some coffee, and says, "I've got all day, I've got an entire lifetime...out with it, Sam." Sam sits for a minute and then he starts to tell a story from a long time ago and little by little he starts unraveling secrets from back then that he held deep inside thinking he was protecting her all these years. When it all becomes known and what stays true is that it was actually her love that saved him all along. That was "Your Kind Of love".
