what you need to know about

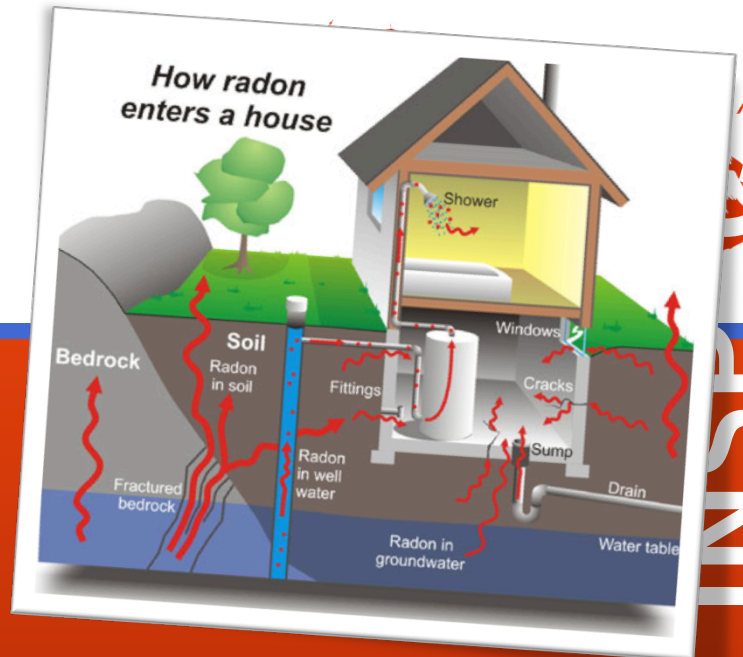

RADON

RADON

AND YOUR HOME

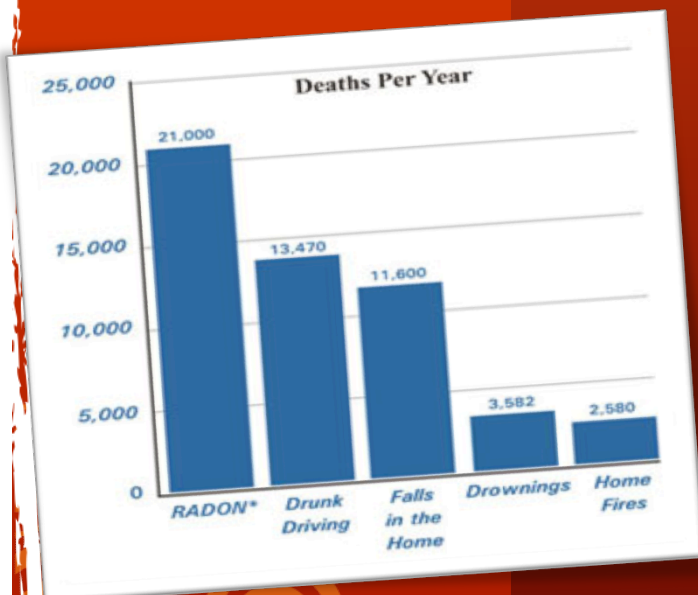

Nearly 1 out of every 15 homes in the US is estimated to have elevated radon levels. While radon problems may be more common in some areas, any home may have a problem. The only way to know about your home is to test.

On average, people spend about 80% of their time eating, sleeping, and breathing the air in their home. EPA estimates that radon causes thousands of cancer deaths in the US each year.

Radon gas has many entry routes:

- Cracks in floors and walls
- Gaps in suspended floors
- Openings around sump pumps and drains
- Cavities in foundations below grading
- Gaps around utility penetrations (pipes and wires)
- Crawl spaces that open directly into the building
- Cracks in concrete slabs
- Well water
