Sergeant Stubby

Stubby was a stray dog that wandered into the encampment for the Connecticut National Guard and befriended the soldiers. When the members of the 102nd Infantry were being deployed to fight in WWI, the soldiers smuggled Stubby onto the ship to help them. Sgt. Stubby helped the service members in many ways. He would lift the spirits of the troops, but he also used his nose to help find injured people or alert them to some of the dangers. During his time with the unit, Sgt. Stubby earned his own patches and medals. He was a true hero war dog. People have written books about him and have made movies about him. He can be found in the Smithsonian Institute National Museum of American History, Armed Forces Collections in Washington D.C.
