AN ARROWHEAD TYPICAL OF HARDIN COUNTY

By R. Gerald McMurtry

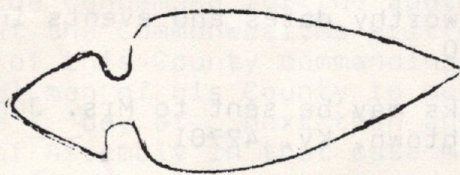

In 1928 two archaeologists, W. D. Funkhouser and William S. Webb were the authors of a book titled ANCIENT LIFE IN KENTUCKY. The 349 page book was published by The Kentucky Geological Survey. The sub-title of the publication was "A Brief Presentation of the Paleontological Succession in Kentucky Coupled with a Systematic Outline of the Archaeology of the Commonwealth."

The two University of Kentucky professors incorporated into their study a chapter titled "Chipped Stone Artifacts" (Chapter XI) and on page 216 there is a statement relative to arrowheads that have an interesting reference to Hardin County, particularly, to those interested in primitive culture. The statement is as follows:

"We have another form (arrowhead) characteristic of Hardin County, Kentucky, while it is believed that standardization was natural and was actually taking place, yet on the other hand it had not eliminated individual specialization as suggested."

This statement was of great interest to me and I wrote the authors for further explanation and comment. On February 3, 1930, Dr. Webb replied to my inquiry. His letter and drawing of the general shape of the arrowhead typical of Hardin County answered my query in detail. Of Course, this study applies only to the state of Kentucky. Undoubtedly, there were arrow makers in other regions of North America who chipped out arrowheads with pointed bases. See Dr. Webb's letter and drawing which is of significant importance in regard to this subject.

(Dr. Webb's drawing is reproduced below and his letter is reproduced on page 5 of this issue.)

Mr. R. G. McMurtry
Elizabethtown, Kentucky

My dear Mr. McMurtry:

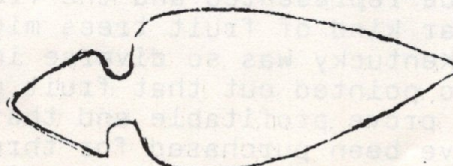

A letter written by you, dated February 3, addressed to Dr. Funkhouser, has just been referred to me for reply. The arrowhead which is typical of your section, has an outline form approximately as that indicated by the enclosed drawing. They are sometimes found outside of Hardin County, but they are found in larger numbers there than anywhere else in the state, and if one gets very far from Hardin County, they are not found at all. The characteristic about them is that they have a pointed base. These we have found in large numbers in the fields and along the streams of Hardin County.

Trusting this is the information you desire, I am

Very sincerely yours,

SAMUEL HAYCRAFT, JR.--FRUIT GROWER (Continued from Vol. V No.4)

The afternoon session was given over to resolutions, one of which was to memorialize the State Legislature for annual appropriations to aid the society and to pass stringent laws as will secure orchards, vineyards, melon-patches and gardens from trespassers, also for the protection of such birds as are destructive of insects. One correspondent accused the jay-bird as injurious to fruit and should be classed with the crow, but he feared there might be some dissenting voices. Another committee was to determine the cause of the failure of the peach crop upon elevated locations, when at the same time there was adequate yield on lowlands.

The committee on diseases of fruit was informed by President Young in his annual report, that the State Commissioner of Agriculture had a "distinguished naturalist now in government employ." His name was Professor Townsend Glover, however, because of "the appearance of cholera in the country, he is restrained from risking a life so valuable away from home at present." <sup>4</sup> The president of the society promised that he would be available to the fruit growers the next year. One hundred sixty-eight plates of fruit were exhibited. Samuel Haycraft exhibited "a plate of White Heath Clings (peaches) very large, measured twelve and a half inches around, the largest weighing one pound."

During the second session there was exhibited in the grape category a plate of Lenoir grapes, described as a compact bunch and a moderate bearer. The committee believed that this grape was designated as "Lincoln" in northern catalogues. Likewise, it was identical to a grape known in Kentucky as "Tuley". Probably a Mr. Tuley obtained the vine in the South.

Three mammoth watermelons were exhibited "one for the committee, which weighed forty-five pounds, and almost too good for cholera times, but was eaten with a relish."

One worthwhile help for fruit growers was the publication in the TRANSACTIONS (second session) of the names and addresses of twenty-one nurseries located in Kentucky. Haycraft wrote that "Hardin County alone has within the last ten years purchased at least 100,000 trees from foreign (out of state) nurseries, at a cost of at least double the amount it would have cost them by sending orders to either the foregoing nurseries and other (Kentucky) nurseries not reported to me."

The printed TRANSACTIONS of the society (second session) provided a list of the members and their post office addresses. It is apparent from the list, Elizabethtown and Hardin County members (although some had failed to pay their $2.00 dues) constituted more than half of the total membership.

Haycraft, in his corresponding secretary's letter of September 18, 1866, expressed the hope that a state organization would eventually grow out of the local unit. He thought all portions of the state should be represented and the fruit growers should learn what particular kind of fruit trees might be best suited for their area because Kentucky was so diverse in climate. The corresponding secretary also pointed out that fruit growing applied to hill country could prove profitable and that Muldraugh's Hill land that could have been purchased for three to ten dollars per acre, now with its adaptation to fruit growing, the offer per acre had risen to twenty, thirty and forty and then often refused.

Continuing his message Haycraft noted that the 1866 fruit crop was generally a failure and that many localities were visited with the scourge of the Asiatic cholera, yet the second session of the Pomological and Horticultural Society was a complete success. He thought "no occupation is more innocent and ennobling to the human family, as it was the choice of the Almighty to place Adam and Eve in the Garden of Eden, with instructions to dress and keep it."

With a plea for new members the corresponding secretary announced that the next meeting (third session) would be held at Bowling Green, Kentucky, the 19th day of September, 1867.

CHRIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, MARRIAGES, BURIALS, BAPTISMS 1840-1910

Christ Episcopal Church was built in 1840 on land donated by Armistead Henry Churchill at the corner of Poplar and Mulberry streets and still stands there virtually unchanged. Over the ensuing years, the church had a few resident pastors but was generally served weekly, bi-weekly, or monthly by priests out of Louisville parishes.

The following list of Marriages, Burials, and Baptisms cover roughly the years 1840-1910. As the congregation has never been large, there are a limited number of entries.

Are you related to the Princess of Wales? If your surname is Strong, Hibbard, Newbold, Cogswell, Holton, Clapp, Waldo, Hart, Parke, Morgan, Stanton, Avery, Lyman, Hunt, Tuttle, Denison, or Huntington you may be a distant cousin of Her Royal Highness. This new book on the American connections of Princess Diana is interesting reading even if you aren't related.

To find out how Brooke Shields, Orson Welles, Humphrey Bogart and many other Hollywood personalities are related to the Princess of Wales, you'll have to read this book.

As there are several rather common Kentucky names mentioned, it might be worth your while to check this out at your local library or favorite book seller.
