PREFACE

I have decided to capture as much of the 158th Field Artillery's history as possible, so this is the eight volume that is based upon source materials that are available and archived. Just from the mere act of time passing, facts can be open to interpretation and indeed they can be viewed differently by different people. For this reason I have compiled U. S. Library of Congress PCN 2018957292 volumes:

Volume No. 1	“Centennial Review”
Volume No. 2	“Battle Campaigns and Honors”
Volume No. 3	“World War II”
Volume No. 4	“Korean War”
Volume No. 5	“Persian Gulf War”
Volume No. 6	“Global War on Terrorism”
Volume No. 7	“Cold War”
Volume No. 8	“Unit Photos and Official Rosters”
Volume No. 9	“Official Journal” 1920 to 1945
Volume No. 10	“Official Journal” 1946 to 1970
Volume No. 11	“Official Journal” 1971 to 1995
Volume No. 12	“Official Journal” 1996 to Present

"RANK AND FILE"

In the army the term "Rank-and-File" was meant to describe the enlisted men; not including NCO's or Officers; who were present in the line of battle with weapons in their hands ready to fight. "Rank" referred to the men standing more or less shoulder to shoulder facing forward next to each other and forming the front of a unit. "File" referred to the soldier standing directly behind each other, from the front rank to the rear rank of the formation. In these linear formations, a unit could be drawn up with a depth of several ranks to maximize the firepower that could be brought to bear directly to the front of the unit. In a three-rank formation, for example, the front rank would kneel (either ready to fire or with fixed bayonets to hold off cavalry), the second rank would stand and fire in the gaps of the first rank, and the third rank would stand and fire in the gaps of the second rank, over the heads of the men in the first rank. When soldiers are "on the march" they line up and stand next to each other (rank) and in a line (file) while they were marching, while NCO's and Officers, on the other hand, march on the outside of that formation. "Rank-and-File" is synonymous with the soldiers who form the core of the army, they are the blood and the muscle that gives it its life and each anonymous face is an integral part of its hereditary deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA), yet everyday they place each other's lives in their hands. This volume is dedicated to capture and identify as many of the "rank-and-file" that have served in the 158th Field Artillery. I have collected many photographs of the 158th Field Artillery but have chosen the ones that most resonate the "rank-and-file".
