CUPW Takes to Parliament Hill

On Monday, September 21, CUPW took to Parliament Hill in Ottawa, delivering a strong message to Members of Parliament returning from their summer recess. Canada Post is a vital public infrastructure that needs investment and expansion, not sweeping service cutbacks.

We were joined by several MPs from the Bloc Québécois and the New Democratic Party who support our campaign. Bloc Québécois Marie-Hélène Gaudreau brought our call for a public review of Canada Post to the House of Commons.

Our Message to Parliament

Our demonstration delivered three key messages:

- It's time for a public mandate review of Canada Post. It's now been a decade since Parliament last reviewed Canada Post, even though the Canadian Postal Service Charter calls for a review every five years. A mandate review would give Canadians the opportunity to have their say about the future of their public postal service.
- Canada Post needs to be transparent about its plans. It's been nearly a year since Canada Post submitted its transformation plan to the federal government, but postal workers and the public remain in the dark on far too many details. It's unacceptable for Canada Post and the Government to make decisions behind closed doors.
- Service expansion is the way forward. We know the postal industry is changing. But successful postal services around the world are forging a path forward, not through cutbacks, but through innovation and diversification. We need to build Canada Post up, not dismantle it.

Let's Keep the Momentum Up

Monday's demonstration was a success, and we thank our Hands Off Campaign coordinators for all their hard work in putting this, and other events across the country together.

Winning a campaign is a long-term effort. In the months ahead, we need to keep organizing, mobilizing and building support for our campaign among the public. We can't win this without a fight. Let's keep the momentum up.

In Solidarity,

Jan Simpson
National President
