He offers a unique combination of (i) operational, (ii) private equity, and (iii) investment banking skill sets. On several different occasions, this "hybrid" perspective has enabled him to add value throughout the entire business cycle, from (i) launching, building, or buying businesses, (ii) to operating and optimizing businesses, (iii) to capitalizing and monetizing businesses. Being able to appreciate various business dynamics from the entrepreneur's perspective (growth and operations), the investor's perspective (risk/return profiles), and the investment banker's perspective (capitalization and monetization) has proven to be quite helpful over the course of his career.

Financial expert, strategic leader, "fix-it" man, seasoned manager, and successful investor with years of unmatched operational, accounting, analysis, and capital markets experience.

As a passionate sportsman he is doing Ultra-Races, Triathlons and loves Martial Arts while believing in fairness and high ethical standards in sports, business and beyond. His current involvement into the field of Sports and education are but not limited to: Head coaching the Swiss Spartans and taking care on their training regime in the various chapters in Switzerland, planning the races and team build-up. Building up the Academy of the SOSF to foster future growth and recognition for the world of obstacle running and being a valued sparring partner for upcoming races on various topics and coordinating the professional athletes and the national team. Beside that he's mentoring University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign Students on Courseras Strategic Leadership and Management program.

Just recently he founded Beastmotion/ Beastcamp to better connect the world of sports and management through mind-boggling experience and better understand the shared values of obstacle-sports and leadership
