

Scary Readings

based on classic horror novels

Source: goodreads posted by Sharon on September 29, 2022

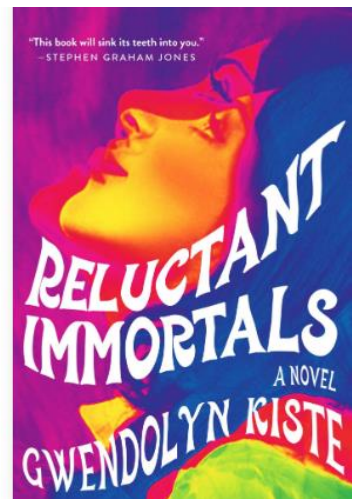

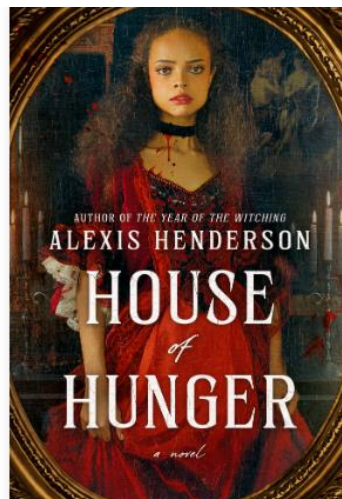

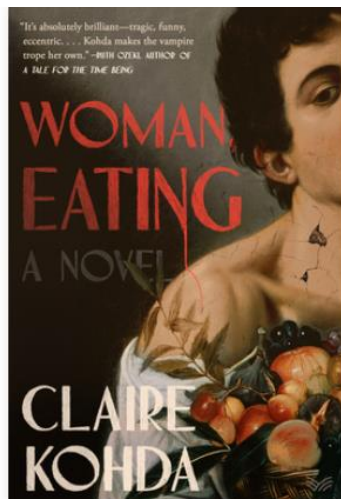

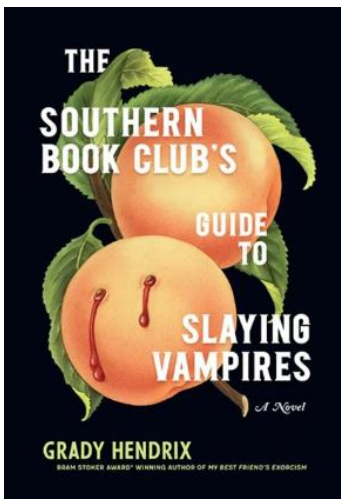

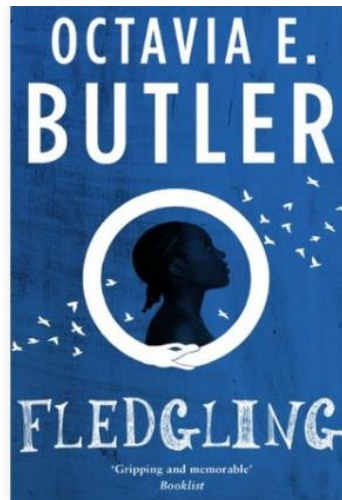

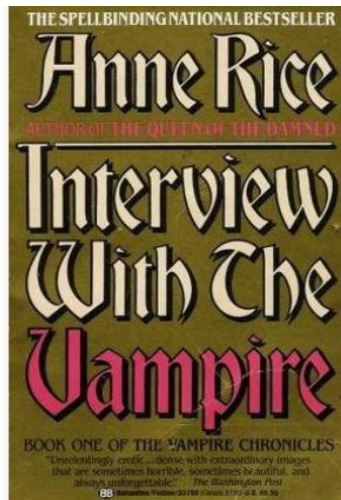

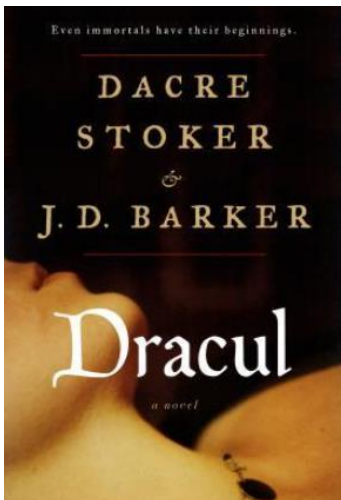

If you liked

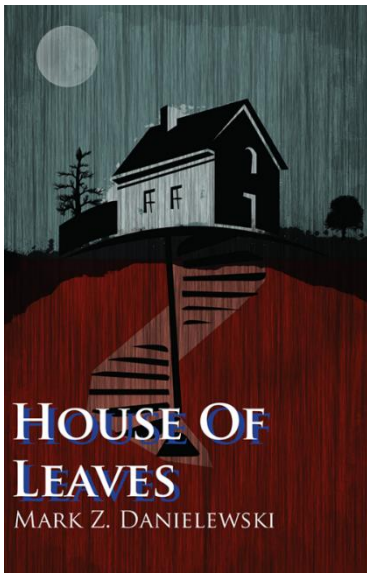

Dracula

by Bram Stoker

... then you might be into reading about: damp castles, staying up late, very pale ladies with sharp teeth, fatal love bites, dudes who turn into bats.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

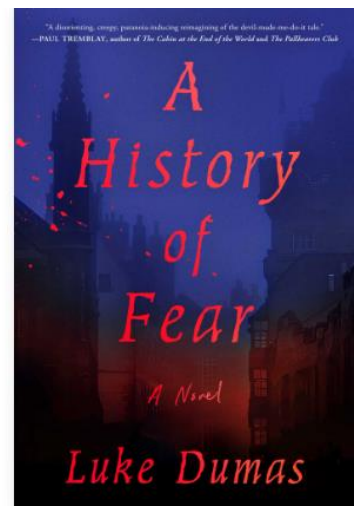

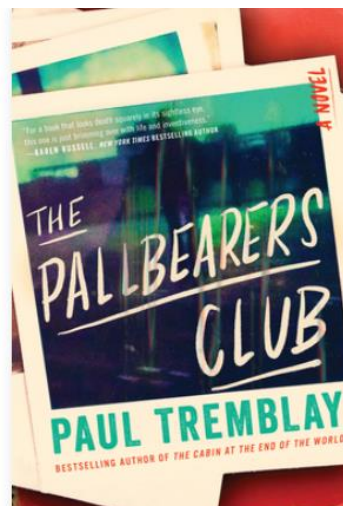

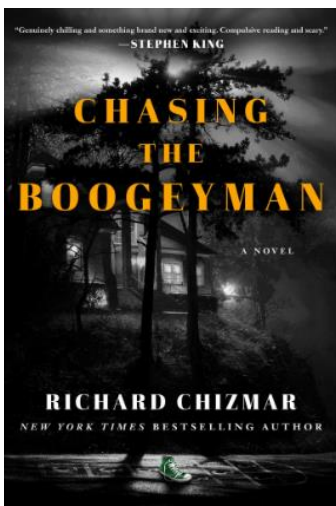

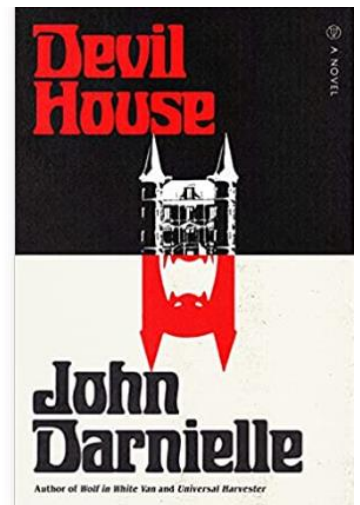

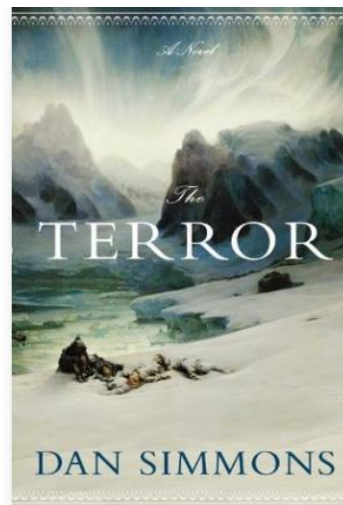

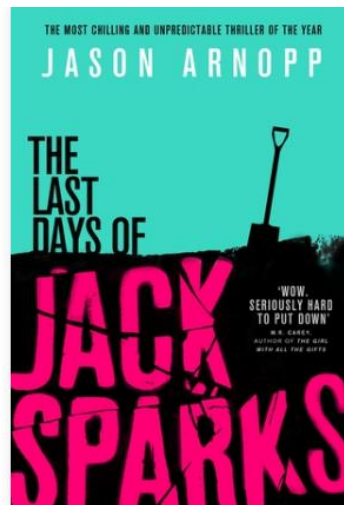

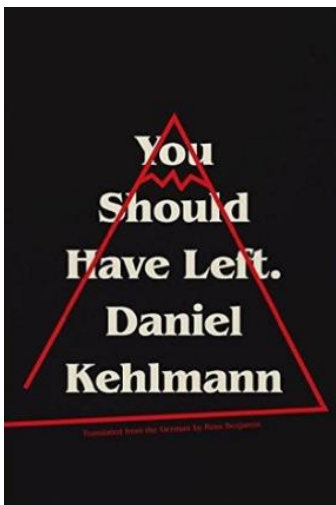

If you liked

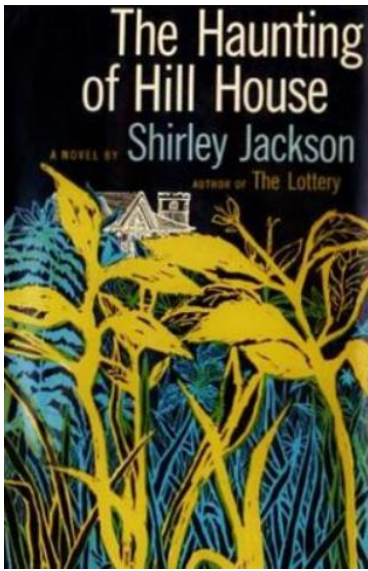

House of Leaves

by Mark Z. Danielewski

... then you might be into reading about:
metaphysical takes on familiar tropes, paying lots of attention to marginalia, books within books, nonlinear narratives, genre-and-mindbendy books.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

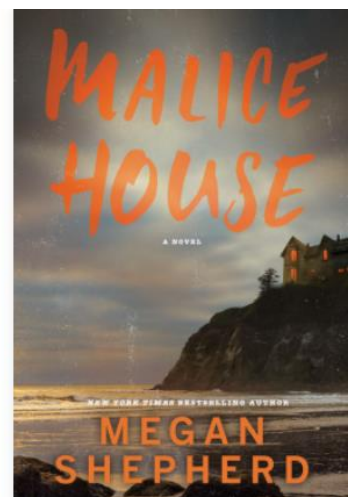

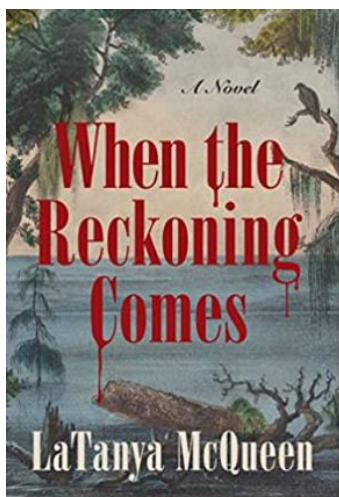

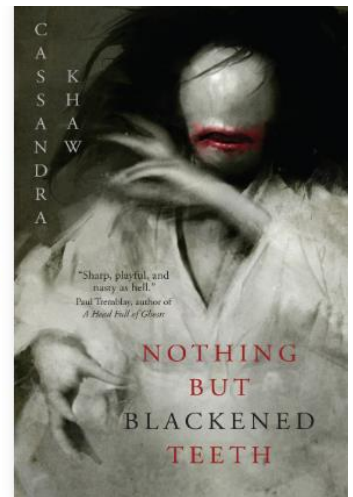

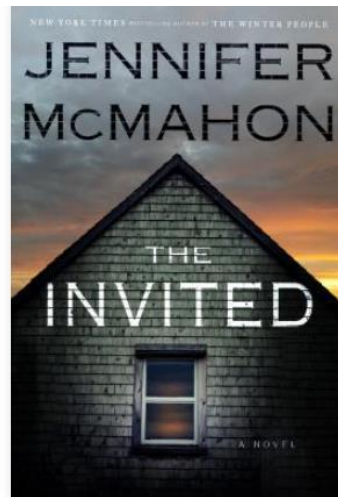

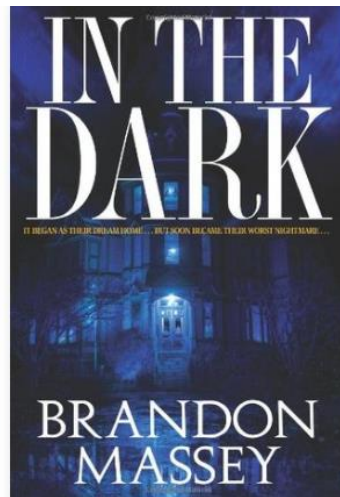

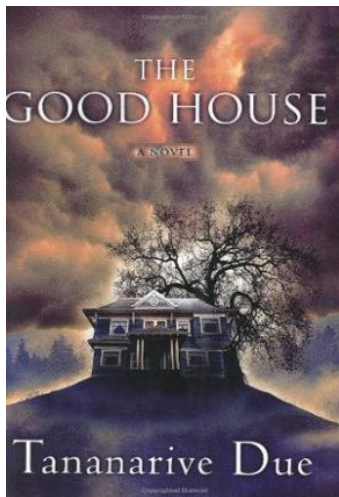

If you liked

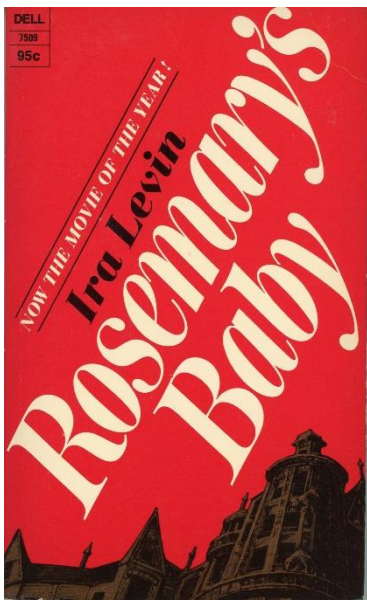

The Haunting of Hill House

by Shirley Jackson

... then you might be into reading about: too-good-to-be-true real estate listings, creaky floors and eerie nighttime noises, doors hanging ajar that you definitely locked, creepy horrors lurking beneath the bed, ancestral sins revisiting subsequent generations.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

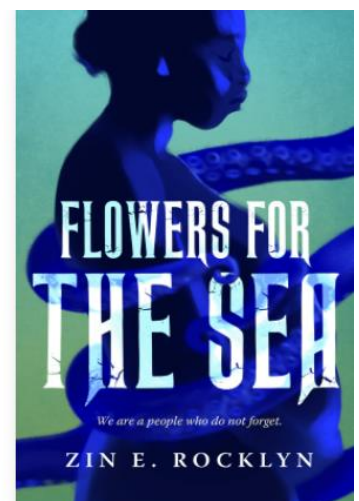

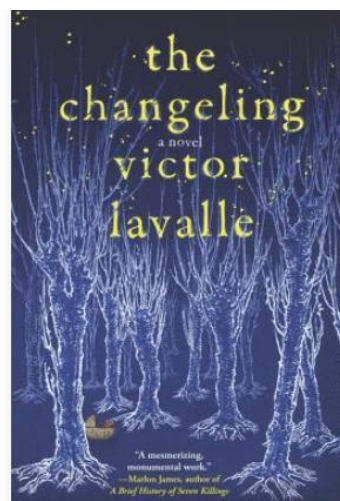

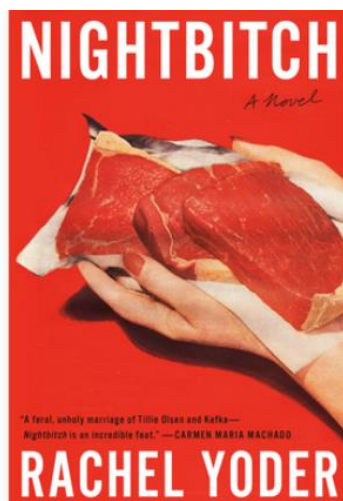

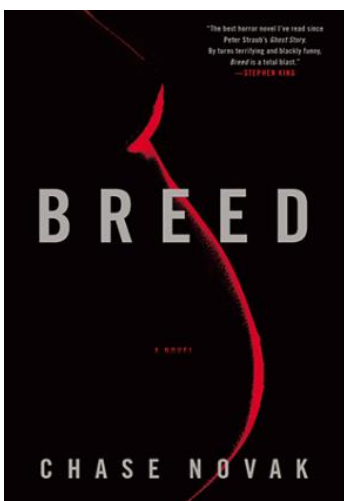

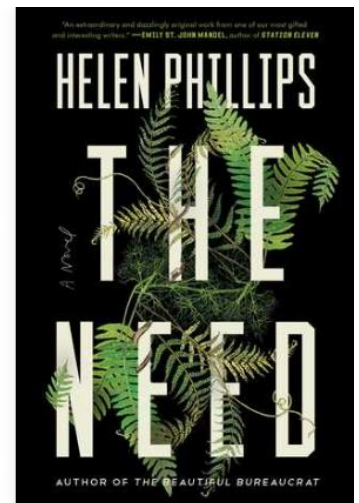

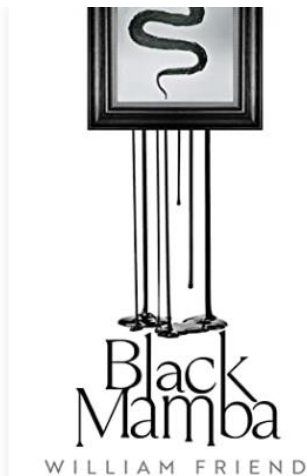

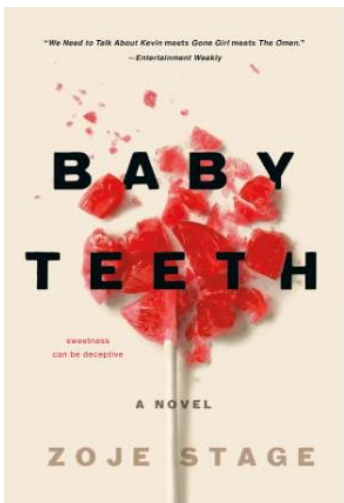

If you liked

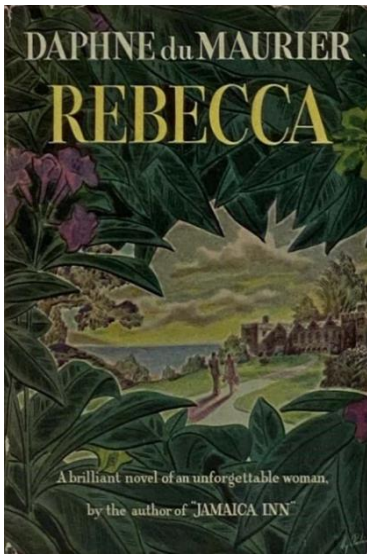

Rosemary's Baby

by Ira Levin

... then you might be into reading about:
pregnancy-as-body horror, overly honest
writing about the terror of parenting, devilishly strange children, religious weirdness, moms on the verge of madness.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

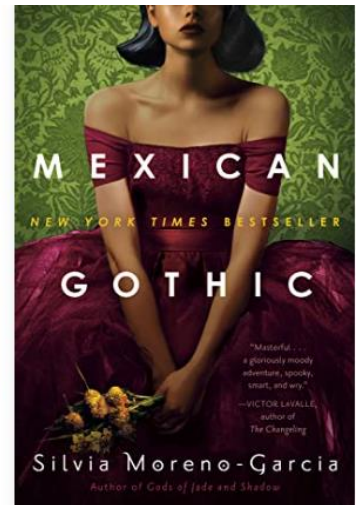

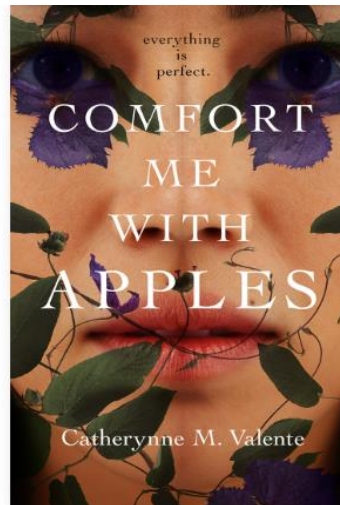

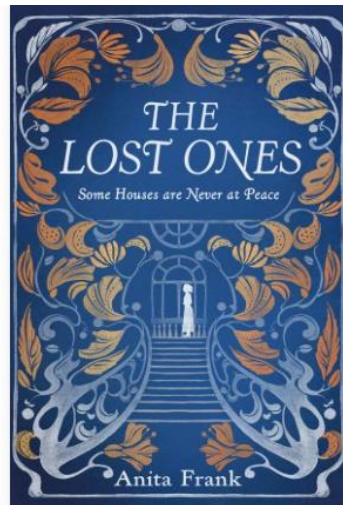

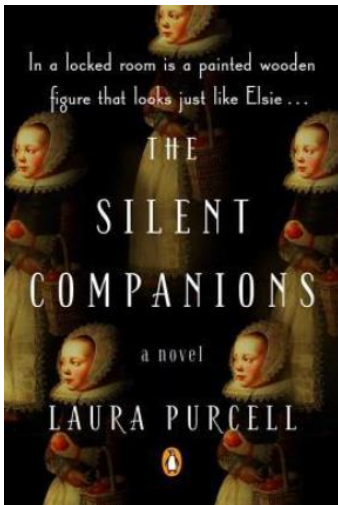

If you liked

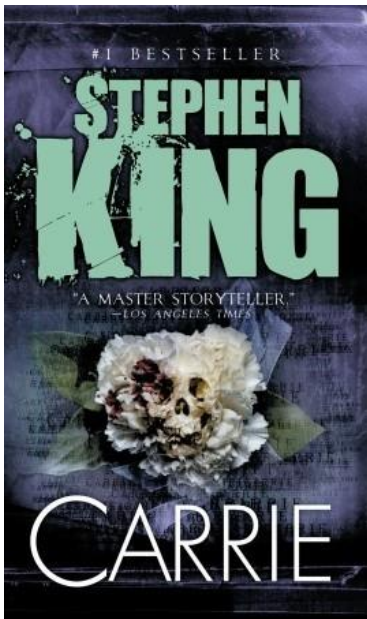

Rebecca

by Daphne du Maurier

... then you might be into reading about: gothic ruins, creepy husbands, ex-wives who just won't go away, physical and psychological isolation, marriages where "till death do us part" becomes a threat.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

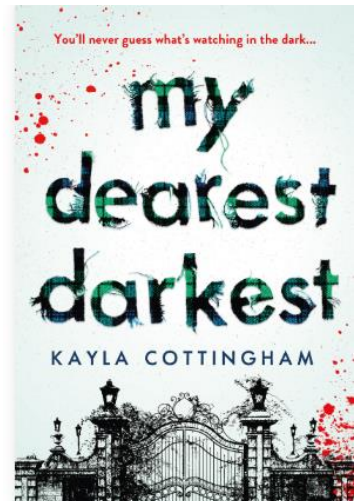

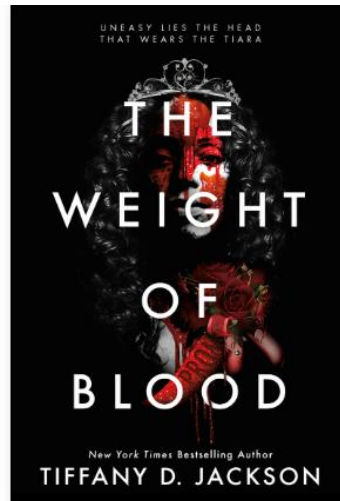

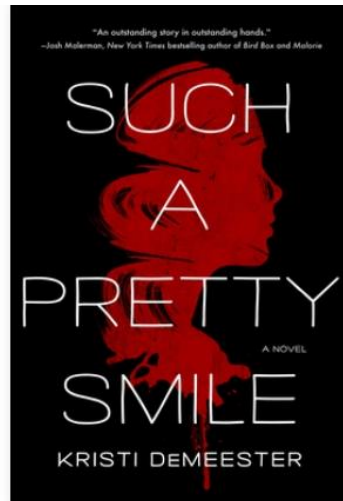

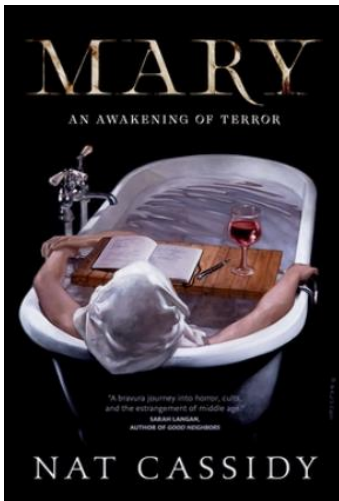

If you liked

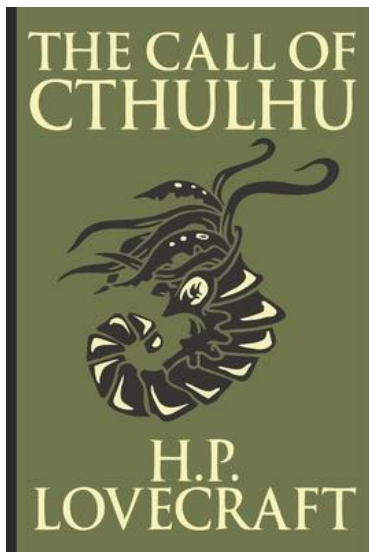

Carrie

by Stephen King

... then you might be into reading about:
female bodies undergoing unsettling changes,
the particular horrors of being in high school, bullies getting their just desserts, teen girls manifesting superpowers.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

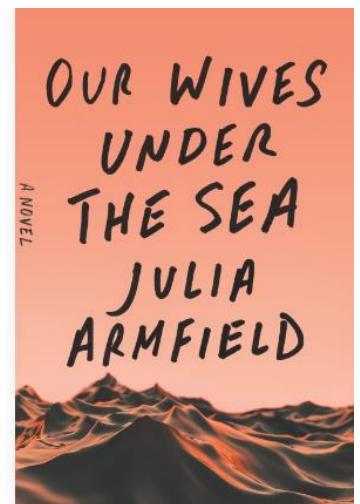

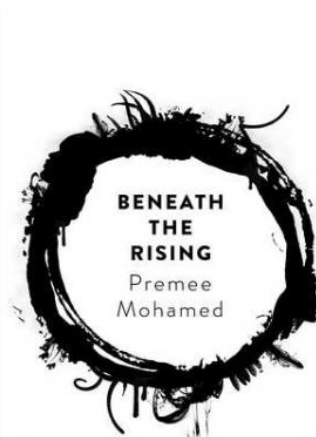

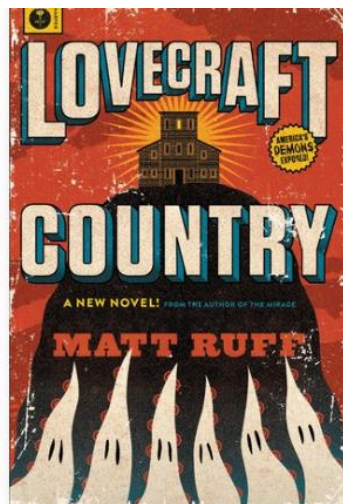

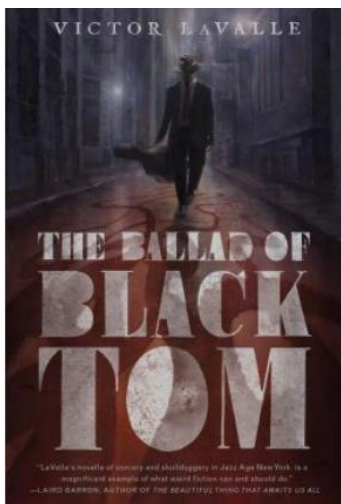

If you liked

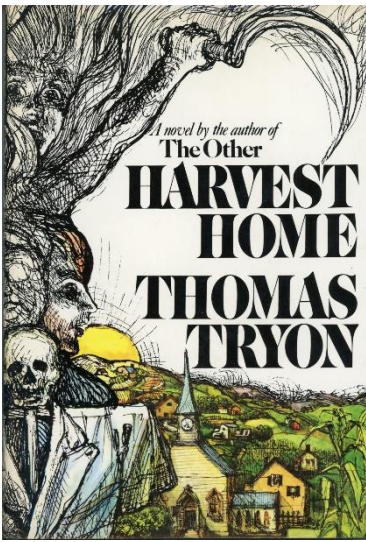

The Call of Cthulhu

by H.P. Lovecraft

... then you might be into reading about:
strange sea creatures, ancient evils, Eldritch nightmares, incomprehensible cosmic horrors, the ocean's darkest depths.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

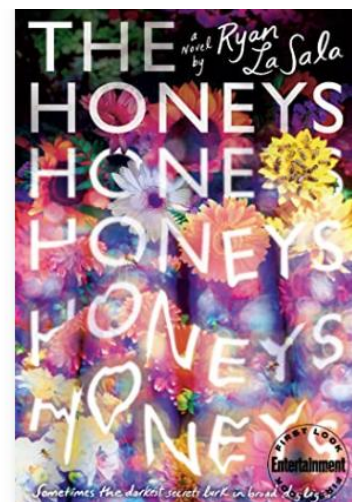

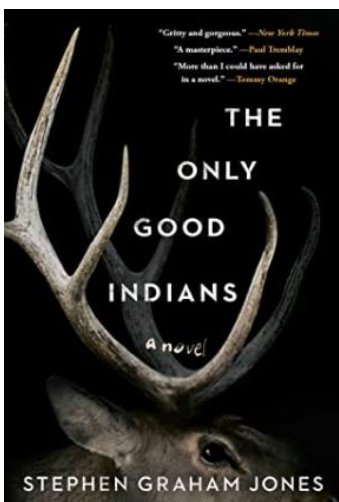

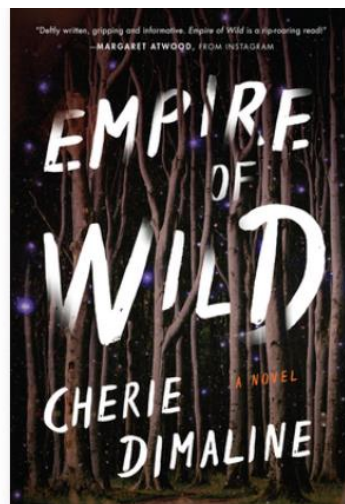

If you liked

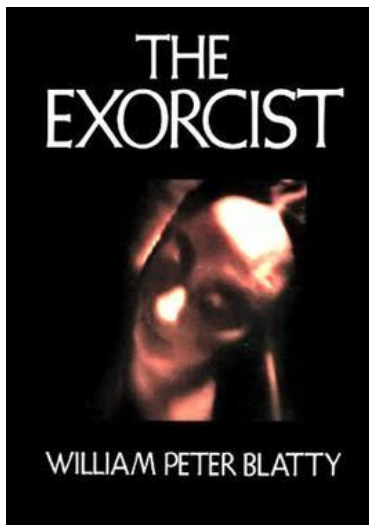

Harvest Home

by Thomas Tryon

... then you might be into reading about: folk horrors, Midsomar-esque vibes, werewolves and wicker men, really mess-up harvests, rural nightmares and urban legends come to life.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

If you liked

The Exorcist

by William Peter Blatty

... then you might be into reading about:
demonic possession, troubled priests, big battles between good and evil, supernatural scaries, otherworldly preoccupations.

And we recommend that you try these books next ...

