General Manager's Comments

Memorial Day was founded upon conclusion of the Civil War in 1865 and was based upon a tradition of decorating the graves of soldiers who had perished while fighting and could not be identified posthumously. The holiday was called Decoration Day, and it continued to be observed annually as an unofficial celebration to honor the dead of all American wars. As it evolved over the twentieth Century, BBQs and other festivities became synonymous with the date as the kickoff to summer, but not until 1971 was Memorial Day officially sanctioned as a Federal Holiday, including a day off from work.
