DC CTE Career & Technical Education (Office of the Deputy Mayor of Education) (Youth Programming/Education)

The ATC helps students access CTE pathways that are aligned to high skill, high wage and/or high demand jobs in the DC area. If you know of any students interested in cybersecurity or general nursing, you can start your path to a high-wage and in-demand career at the ATC, even if programs in these fields are not offered at your home high school. You can earn high school and college course credit at Trinity Washington University for the classes taken at the ATC at no cost to you.

Office of the Deputy Mayor for Health and Human Services (SNAP) (Human Resources/ Government Assistance)

Starting June 1, due to changes in federal law, the Department of Human Service (DHS) will begin screening customers whenever they apply or recertify for Supplemental Nutrition Assistance Program (SNAP) benefits to determine if they need to meet the new work requirements.

The work requirements apply to SNAP customers who meet the definition of Able-Bodied Adults Without Dependents (ABAWD) and do not qualify for an exemption from work requirements. People who are subject to the work requirements and do not meet them will only be able to receive SNAP for three months in a 36-month period.

Read the DHS FAQ page on SNAP requirements.

Find out if you may need to meet the new work requirements with the new DHS pre-screener

Library of Congress Veteran Storytelling & Career Pathways Activation (Veteran Event)

The founder of the American Veteran Arts Collective (AVAC), a DC-based workforce initiative supporting veterans and military-connected communities as they navigate civilian reintegration and workforce transition.

On June 11 and 18, AVAC will launch a pilot activation in partnership with the Veterans History Project at the Library of Congress titled: "Story, Service & Career Pathways."

The initiative is designed to help veterans, military spouses, reservists, and military-connected families explore identity, storytelling, public humanities, and civilian career pathways through guided narrative workshops and institutional engagement with the Library of Congress.

In addition to preserving military stories through the Veterans History Project, the activation also introduces participants to pathways within arts, culture, museums, libraries, communications, and civic institutions.

DCPS Afterschool Program Registration Now Open!
