Singaporean actor, Rayve Zen is making his mark across Asia in films as diverse as Canada/Hong Kong/Malaysia co-production "Million Loves in Me," and China/Hong Kong production "Shock Wave."

Zen began his entertainment career as the front man for Singaporean rock outfit Turn the Tap. He appeared in several commercials before he met American stage director Robert Wilson and was invited to train at the Watermill International Summer Program in New York. After a number of roles in the theater, Zen's breakthrough role was playing a policeman in Mediagroup crime series "Mata Mata." He also made a mark in the crime series "Verdict".

In 2014, Zen moved to Hong Kong. "I moved to Hong Kong to seek different challenges and it was always in my intentions to embrace my Chinese roots and experience Chinese culture at its source," says Zen.
