You probably didn't expect a quote from Alfred Lord Tennyson as a subject in your email today (especially as it is just above an image of a rider being flung off a horse) but it appealed to me as I considered all we're looking to highlight here. There are so many opportunities to capture the action and beauty around us that we see in our world every day, but we have to keep these emails in bite-size chunks for you with your busy schedule to hear what we have going on inside our Photo Graphics world. So, hopefully in short order, here's the things that are front of mind for us in this current website update - I hope you have time to check them out.

There are some new images throughout the website including this one of Fernando Alonso (in his Ferrari team days) from the Montreal F1 race a few years back. When I chose it a week ago as the primary image on the intro page I had no idea that Fernando would be so prominent in today's Montreal race - photographic serendipity again played a role as it often does, and that's a good thing.

This website update has several new images in the Action Graphics section of the store. It was time to add some images from the rodeos we've visited over the past few years. Great sports action, and real drama which is amazingly easy to capture - and it will look good on someone's wall, I'm sure.

As far as upcoming things we are working on finalizing arrangements for some new and quite awesome tools that will help with printing and shipping of images, while serving to keep prices down which is an important consideration in these times. There is also the potential to have a really powerful online gallery supporting the presentation of images by size, media type, and room configuration and I'm very hopeful we can make all of that happen by July. These tools would take the power of the online store back into your home, and I think that would be very useful. It's not done yet, but I'm quite hopeful. Fingers crossed, if that helps.

And, finally, for the rest of that very applicable quote...

"So many worlds, so much to do, so little done, such things to be."

Alfred Lord Tennyson

Great words to consider living by. Have a great week, and we'll talk soon I hope.
