A LITTLE HISTORY

The original structure of La Crémaillère Restaurant was a farmhouse from the early 1750s and was drawn on a G. Washington troops map dated from 1777. During the Revolutionary War it was the home of the Widow Brush and then passed on to the Hobby family, with B.F. Hobby living there during the Civil War era. Rachel Hobby married Charles Brundage, and the house was in the Brundage family until 1924.

The house took on new life in 1925 when Mr. William Jackson acquired it, together with a neighboring home and large acreage, and formed the Westchester Women's Golf and Tennis Club, with Mrs. Manville as the first president. Tennis courts were constructed to the left of the restaurant (where the parking area is located today), and a beautiful golf course was developed. It flourished until the 1929 financial "crash" and was followed by the Middle Patent Golf Club, with both men and women enjoying membership.

Later Mr. Jackson sold the fine old house to Antoine Gilly in 1946 and the French Restaurant "La Crémaillère" was born. The house has had wings added, porches added and then enclosed. But its stately twin-end chimneys continue to dominate this fine old building.

La Crémaillère Restaurant has operated for almost 80 years.
