Vaisala Inc., a Louisville maker of weather- and environment-monitoring equipment, in a recently filed lawsuit is accused of infringing on a patent held by Texas-based Saros Licensing LLC.

The suit, filed this week in U.S. District Court in Denver, alleges Vaisala technology was developed in violation of a 1999 patent for "a domestic appliance such as a microwave oven (that) is adapted for interaction with a communications network such as the internet by the addition of a substantially self-contained discrete communications module connectable to the communications network," court documents show.

Saros is represented by attorney Isaac Rabicoff of Chicago-based firm Rabicoff Law LLC. Representatives for the plaintiff and Vaisala could not be reached for comment.

The suit demands unspecified damages.
