Solutions

Overview:

This one-day course will give overview of sensory processing needs and differences. It will increase your awareness and ability to spot the signs of sensory needs and give you some basic strategies to help.

Course Aims:

The day will cover:

- The 8 senses considered in sensory processing assessment.
- How the way that we process information from these underpins the way we behave and function in daily life.
- Patterns of sensory processing differences.
- How to recognise if a person has sensory processing difficulties or sensory differences.
- What's our sensory processing like as a group?
- Experiential tasks to understand how sensory processing difficulties may affect people.
- Case examples to illustrate what sensory processing problems might look like.
- When is a sensory preference a sensory need?
- Opportunities to look at commonly used sensory equipment and consider how it might benefit people.
- Next steps – how to become a sensory champion

Training made easy

Learning Outcomes:

Delegates will understand:

- How people with sensory processing difficulties respond differently, including over and under responses to sensations and the ability to move in a coordinated way.
- How sensory processing differences affect our behaviour, our emotions and our ability to interact. Simple strategies to use with their clients.

Who Will Benefit?

This course is suitable for therapists who have little or no prior knowledge of sensory processing, doctors, nurses, psychologists, dieticians, speech and language therapists, social workers, and any other health professional. This course will not equip you to carry out a sensory assessment but will provide a basic understanding and awareness of sensory processing. It is applicable across the life span.
