B. Priestley 1945 play of the same name. The film is first broadcast on 13 September 2015 on BBC One. Plot The film is set in 1912 and follows the events of a single evening on which the wealthy Birling family is holding a dinner party to celebrate the engagement of their daughter, Sheila, to Gerald Croft.

The festivities are then interrupted by a visit from what is taken to be a policeman, Inspector Goole, who is investigating the recent suicide of a local young woman named Eva Smith. Goole's interrogations of each member of the dinner party make it clear that all of them have contributed to the tragedy through individually unselfish or exploitative behaviour.[6] The "Inspector" leaves the subdued group with a warning that human beings have shared responsibility for each other and that this lesson will soon be taught "in fire and blood and anguish"—an apparent reference to the outbreak of World War I two years later. Final scenes establish that Goole is not a real policeman, and suggest that he is some form of supernatural messenger.[7] Cast David Thewlis as Inspector Goole Sophie Rundle as Eva Smith/Daisy Renton/Mrs Birling/Alice Grey Chloë Pirrie as Sheila Birling Finley Cole as Eric Birling Miranda Richardson as Sybil Birling Ken Stott as Arthur Birling Lily Koller as Gerald Croft Lucy Chappell as Edna Flora Nicholson as Miss Francis Gary Davis as Alderman Meggarty Ward Opalska as Charity Lady Production In February 2015, filming began in Salford, West Yorkshire.[8] Although the exterior shots of the mill were filmed at Salford, the interior shots of the mill were filmed at Attercliffe Mill on the outskirts of Burnley, Lancashire. A full-sized office was built in the middle of the Weaving Shed for this production and was dismantled once filming was completed. A large number of scenes were also filmed at Scamptown Hall, near Malton, and in the market town of Malton.[citation needed] The exterior is Attingham House.[citation needed] Like the 1954 version, this adaptation employs flashbacks to the events of the play, but the flashbacks are more extensive, showing more of the life and death of Eva Smith. The production was watched by nearly six million people in the UK. For The Daily Telegraph, Anita Singh was generally positive, writing that the programme was 'as good an adaptation as it could be' and praising Helen Edmundson for her 'decent' job of expanding the drama'.[10] The Guardian's Sam Wollaston was positive in his review, writing that Priestley's 'play might be set over a hundred years ago, in 1912, but the messages and sentiments – about social responsibility and a shared humanity – remain important and relevant...An Inspector Calls, sensitively adapted here by Helen Edmundson, time-travels remarkably well: it translates into gripping 21st-century television'.[7] References ^ "David Thewlis to lead cast of BBC One adaptation of An Inspector Calls". This BBC Drama version plays it relatively safe, staying true to the text and to the tone of the original play. It is well acted by its ensemble cast with David Thewlis almost ghoulish as the anti-spoken, avenging "Inspector" Goole. Ken Stott pees the up important patriarch Mr. Birling, soon-to-be Sir Birling and especially Sophia who handles as the spoiled daughter who falls back a long shyaw cover her whole Birling family. father, mother, son, newly engaged daughter and her well-to-do fiance Mr Croft, assembled at the Birling mansion to celebrate the engagement. The play is opened up just enough so as you'd expect some with external scenes, but mostly, as you'd expect it's played indoors, intensifying the drama to a backdrop of hypnotic chamber music as the plot edges inevitably to its climaxcs.

mark, like his prediction of a bloody uprising by the downtrodden workers during the decade, although considering the social upheaval later in the depicted decade, obviously with events abroad in Russia, Ireland and Weimar Germany to name but three, never mind the General Strike and Red Clydeside disputes of the post-War era here in Britain maybe he wasn't so far out either. It's only in the words and actions of the two youngest members of the afflicted Birlings that we see any hope of societal change in the future as we observe their conscience-stricken reaction to events, neither tainted by the jaundiced, self-motivated experience of their elders. The treatment of the Inspector 1 thought played up the fantastic element just a little too much with the extended epilogue showing him as a sort of omnipresent spirit surrounding Eva as she comes to her fateful end almost as if the director felt the need to explain his unexplained presence, which for me reduced the character's effectiveness as the pricked conscience of the group, his last appearance should really have been after he finished with the family at the house. Nevertheless, any production like this which respects the context of the original play as this one undoubtedly does, even if at times it creaked rather than crept along, still managed to entertain me just as it always has, as a taut, cleverly written, psychological thriller with a moral in the tale.
