Second Hand, “Eye-Witness” Accounts: Why Historical Documents and Grains of Salt Should Be Taken Together Presented By Andrew Schneider

The perspective of a historian when studying historical documents is critical when an archaeologist is facing a minute amount of documentation. This is especially true when researching archaeology in South Florida. Here, archaeologists deal with having only a handful of accounts from which to gain an understanding of the ethno-history of this region. These few historical accounts have often been taken at face value, leading to gross misinterpretations of the archaeological record. The research presented here will show how interpreting the historical record in a manner consistent with historical research, can aid the interpretation of the archaeological record by archaeologists.
