Docu+ Announces Exciting Partnership with Educational Distribution Leader GOOD DOCS

SEOUL, KOREA – Docu+, a pioneering impact film studio, is thrilled to announce a significant step forward in its mission to provide educational resources to a wider audience. We have proudly signed a distribution deal with the reputable and industry-leading educational distribution company, GOOD DOCS.

This strategic partnership between Docu+ and GOOD DOCS comes as a result of a shared vision to make high-quality educational content more accessible to schools, libraries, community organizations, and the general public. GOOD DOCS, renowned for its commitment to promoting enlightening and impactful documentaries and educational films, aligns perfectly with Docu+'s core values and objectives.

With this collaboration, Docu+ will leverage GOOD DOCS' extensive distribution network, ensuring that our content reaches global audiences across various educational platforms. Our first feature documentary film ZERO WASTE will be available for streaming, licensing, and purchase through GOOD DOCS' widespread channels, allowing educators, students, and lifelong learners to access valuable resources that inspire, educate, and entertain.

Founder and Director of Docu+, Danny Kim, expressed great enthusiasm about the partnership, stating, "We are thrilled to partner with GOOD DOCS, a company that shares our passion for educational excellence and social impact. Together, we will further our mission of fostering a love for learning and knowledge dissemination, transcending boundaries and making a positive difference in countless lives."

Through this distribution deal, Docu+ anticipates reaching a wider audience, tapping into new markets, and enhancing the educational landscape significantly. As both companies continue to produce thought-provoking and impactful content, this partnership promises to shape the future of educational media, inspiring generations to come.
