Group: Shortcut Productions and Aletia Upstairs

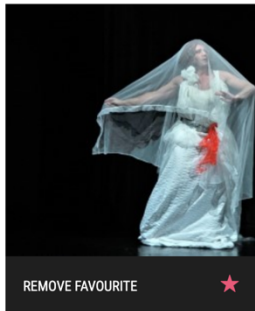

This five-star show returns to the Fringe following last year's success. Set in the world of expressionist painter Otto Dix, as Julia Berber – Anita Berber's fictional sister, Aletia Upstairs explores Weill, Brecht, and Weimar cabaret songs like Alabama Song, Falling in Love Again, Pirate Jenny, Barbara Song, Lavender Song and I am a Vamp. The not-so-famous Berber sister relates the Weimar period to contemporary events with a fair balance of pathos and comedy as well as audience singalongs. London's leading cabaret artiste extraordinaire, performs and sings up a storm. Simply wunderbar!

Whether you love opera or not, try it. This poignant and funny performance of anecdote and movement explores an opera queen's love of Joan Sutherland (and encounters with La Stupenda), while reflecting on his relationship with his mother. A playful homage to Kazuo Ohno's iconic butoh performance, Admiring L'Argentina. Camp storytelling, lyrical movement; a captivating display of light and dark, absence, humour and diva worship for dance, theatre and opera lovers alike. Laughing and crying optional, that warm glow of being in the company of someone passionate about their topic, highly likely. Supported by University of Worcester.

Danced to a hilarious medley of Angela Lansbury, Delia Smith and Bette Midler this one-man romp is a pseudo-glamorous jaunt through pop culture, queer art, childhood dreams and life-changing surgery. It may be entertaining, but it demands a punishing vulnerability of the performer with surprises at every turn. Supported by haunting music by Donna McKeivitt, glittering queer garments by Andrew Walker, mentoring by Wendy Houstoun and a unique improvised lighting design by Jen Wren.

Britain's Got Talent approached Mark Bunyan last October to sing on their programme but two days before his London Palladium debut, the BGT lawyers decided that his song about apples was too rude for ITV. Instead, he has included it as part of his Edinburgh Fringe return. 'One of the great comedians at the piano' (Loose Ends, Radio 4). 'He writes and performs with a rare combination of wit, sensitivity and tenderness... In turn, hilariously funny and extremely moving... Don't miss him: he is simply superb' (Scotsman).

Challenging homophobia and transphobia within our communities, Out is a conversation between two bodies; a live art/dance performance, reclaiming dancehall and celebrating queerness amongst the bittersweet scent of oranges. Embracing personal, political and cultural dissonance, this defiant act of self-expression smashes through the silence, summoning voices and re-enacting movements in a chaotic mash-up of remembrance and reinvention.

Self Portraits plays with notions of gender, sexuality and the effects that time and age have on our bodies, our perception of who we are and who we have been and who we might become. A collection of several short dances of intense choreographic intensity, told through humour, theatre, movement and dance. Underpinning the choreography is a collection of self-written monologues that draw from the autobiographical and from popular culture (referencing Kate Bush, Alfred Hitchcock, Tennessee Williams and Quentin Crisp). The show skilfully weaves athletic moves and thought-provoking text into a compelling show of innovative, accessible dance.
