Miami is the only city in the United States that was founded by a woman. Julie Tuttle founded the city, originally known as "Biscayne Bay" County, in 1896.

The Beatles hit song "Yesterday" (1965) is the most recorded song of all time. Before its release, it was initially titled "Scrambled Eggs."

The famous action figure G.I. Joe was inspired by real life Marine Corps Colonel Mitchell Page.

When Cabbage Patch Kids (invented in 1977 by Xavier Roberts) first sold in retail stores, employees donned hospital gowns for a unique buyer experience.

"Let's do it," were the famous last words of convicted murderer Gary Gilmore. These words not only inspired Nike's advertising slogan, "Just Do It," as well as The Police's song "Bring on the Night," which speculated on Gary Gilmore's possible feelings.

Sex.com is the most expensive domain name, according to the Guiness Book of World Records. It was purchased for $13 million in 2010.

Wayne Gretzky has won the most MVP awards of all the players in North American men's sports leagues, with a total of nine. His uniform #99 has been retired throughout the National Hockey League. The honor of having his number retired throughout an entire league has only ever been achieved by one other athlete, Jackie Robinson (#42).

The word Jeep comes from the phonetic sound of the abbreviation "G.P.," a military term which stands for "general purpose" vehicle.

Famed artist Leonardo DaVinci was also a highly skilled inventor, and is credited for creating the first iterations of ball bearings, a parachute, a diving suit, the machine gun, the armored tank, and a flying machine.

Wonder Woman (1941) is known for her classic weapon, the Lasso of Truth. This is a nod to the comic's creator, psychologist Willaim Marston, who invented the polygraph, or lie detector.

Notable pop artist Andy Warhol is credited for coining the term "fifteen minutes or fame." His piece Eight Elvises (1963) sold for a whopping $100 million. Today, his hometown of Pittsburgh hosts a museum exclusively dedicated to his work.