The Joy of Christmas Creep

“What!?! Christmas stuff already. It isn’t Halloween yet.”

Who hasn’t said this? It is a Christmas tradition to complain about what has been labelled, Christmas Creep. The tradition of complaining about Christmas Creep is part of the accumulative traditions of Christmas in North America.

People have been saying Christmas is starting too early for decades. A couple Charlie Brown specials make this clear. The TV special A Charlie Brown Thanksgiving from 1973 has a scene in it where Sally goes shopping for a turkey tree for Thanksgiving but can only find Christmas stuff. A year later, It’s the Easter Beagle, Charlie Brown, has the Peanuts characters going shopping for Easter in the middle of April and seeing Christmas displays.

In a non-fiction based example, a St. Petersburg Florida newspaper from September 25, 1968, reads as follows:

“Earlier every year. It used to be the day after Thanksgiving, then the day after Halloweed, and now it’s shortly after Labor Day that the Christmas season starts showing up in St. Petersburg stores. Several already have put up Yule displays, urging shoppers to get the jump on each other.”

As far back as 1912, there were retailers selling the idea of shopping early. An advertisement from October 28, 1912 in the Montreal newspaper Daily Telegraph reads: “This may SEEM a little premature to you—but it really is NOT... not many days left in which to do your Christmas buying.”

A brilliant article in the webzine Slate discusses how Christmas Creep goes all the way back the Victorian age. Author Paul Collins says, “The problem, then as now, was not the idea of shopping before Thanksgiving—that barrier had already toppled—but the more heated question of pushing past another holiday and into the precincts of Halloween. Sioux City, Iowa, merchants were berated in 1901 for revving up Christmas sales in mid-October, and that same season saw the Philadelphia Inquirer signing the annual complaint that ‘Gift buying has begun in earnest—seems to get earlier every year.’”

For a time, there was a genuine reason for the season's Christmas Creep in those days, the early 1900's. As the article in Slate lays out, increasing the days of Christmas shopping meant less abuse of child labor in that frenetic, and fearsome final week of Christmas shopping. Progressive giant Florence Kelly, co-founder of the NAACP, and Labor Unions pushed for shopping to be evenly spread in a longer shopping season so that the final week before Christmas day didn't see children working long, exhaustive hours selling, manufacturing, or bike-delivering gifts. Collins writes, "Early shopping was part of Kelley's crusades for child labor laws and an eight-hour workday, because the last few weeks before Christmas were exactly when overtime and seasonal child labor were most abused."

During times of war, more time for Christmas shopping assured that soldiers got their gifts by the big day. This is where we get the Christmas in July adage. Buy in July and get it to the boys overseas in time.

The added benefit was to the retailers. They had more evenly spread books and a longer shopping season, which meant better and more consistent sales.

So, there is nothing new under the sun when it comes to the quip, "Christmas comes earlier each and every year."

That said, is Christmas coming early such a bad thing? Having worked retail for many years and experienced many a Christmas season, the existence of more time for people to shop means less stress for clerks working in those frenetic, last days before Christmas.

But more importantly is the spiritual import. I am also reminded of that Christmas tune, made famous by the Charlie Brown special, Merry Christmas, Charlie Brown. "Christmastime is here, happiness and cheer, Oh, that we could always see such spirit through the year."

Yes, the retailing involved in a longer Christmas season may be a problem. However, a longer Christmas season itself, one whose spirit lasts through the year, that would be a good thing, as the song suggests.

A spirit of Christmas not just early but perennially – what would that look like?

Finally, we must ask -- the spirit of Christmas, what is it? It is the spirit of Joy to the World, a joy that results from Hope-realized, hope for love and forgiveness and liberation.

Luke 4:18 makes it clear what the spirit of Christmas is. Here Jesus says, "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, because he has anointed me to proclaim good news to the poor. He has sent me to proclaim liberty to the captives and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty those who are oppressed, to proclaim the year of the Lord's favor."

The Spirit of Christmas is the jubilee brought forth by a baby's birth, a jubilee marked by a new way for the poor, freedom for those celled in and kept down, sight for those who've never seen.

So when you see and want to complain about Christmas coming too early, see it as a reminder that we need the Spirit of Christmas all the time, we need the Spirit that offers us poor souls good news amid the bad, that shows a way out of no way, an insight into light instead of darkness.

One of the amazing things I get to do on a daily basis in the office is read some of the notes that come in from past congregants. I thought I would share this one from Ann Stoutenboroughs grandchildren who remembered St. Paul's fondly. One of the best parts of my job....Ann

UPDATE FROM THE SEARCH COMMITTEE:

The interim time between ministers is an intentional season that is guided in part by the preparation of a Local Church Profile. Using the Profile, the church can discover its data and express its story for the reliable discernment of a search committee and the beginning of a new pastorate. Searching ministers will want to see this document in its entirety. Three sections of the Local Church Profile are: Who Are We Now, Who Is Our Neighbor, and Who Is God Calling Us To Become. Some questions are easy to answer. Some are not so easy.

Council, Rev. Don, and office manager Ann have been gathering information and working on the church profile. Pastor Sheresa began the process before she left when we were all asked to write our thoughts on the long paper in Friendship Hall. Rev. Don also distributed a survey. This information has been tabulated and included.

When our profile is complete, it will be sent to the conference to post online at UCC Ministry Opportunities. Then the search committee, comprised of Carl and Jennifer Batliner, Cindy Burnett, Barb Flory, and Rick Lyons representing both Church Council and membership, will begin receiving ministerial profiles to read and discuss.

We will keep you updated.
