Homeschooling in North Carolina offers families the opportunity to educate their children at home according to state guidelines. Here's an overview of the homeschooling laws and requirements in North Carolina:

1. State Requirements:

- North Carolina homeschooling law requires parents to file a Notice of Intent (NOI) to operate a homeschool with the North Carolina Division of Non-Public Education (DNPE) each year.
- The NOI should be filed by the parent or guardian before the homeschool begins and must include basic information about the homeschool, including the name and address of the homeschool, the name and address of the parent(s) or guardian(s), and the name and date of birth of the student(s) to be enrolled.

2. Record-Keeping:

- Homeschooling families in North Carolina are required to maintain certain records, including attendance records and immunization records.
- Parents must keep a record of attendance for each homeschool student, documenting at least nine calendar months of instruction per year, with each month consisting of at least 180 days or 1,000 hours of instruction.

3. Standardized Testing:

- North Carolina homeschooling law does not require standardized testing for homeschooled students. However, parents may choose to administer standardized tests as part of their homeschooling program.
- If standardized tests are administered, the results are not required to be submitted to the state, but parents may keep them for their records.

4. Qualifications for Homeschool Teachers:

- North Carolina does not require homeschooling parents to have specific educational qualifications or teaching credentials.
- Parents have the freedom to determine the educational approach and curriculum for their homeschool, provided it meets the state's requirements for attendance and instruction.

5. Graduation Requirements:

North Carolina homeschooling students are not subject to specific graduation requirements set by the state. Instead, homeschooling parents or administrators may establish their graduation requirements for homeschooled students.
