Homeschooling in North Dakota offers families the flexibility to customize their children's education while adhering to state regulations. Here's an overview of the homeschooling laws and requirements in North Dakota:

1. Notification Requirement:

- North Dakota homeschooling law requires parents or guardians to submit a written notification to the local public school district superintendent at least 14 days before beginning homeschooling.
- The notification should include the names and ages of the children being homeschooled, the address where instruction will occur, and the qualifications of the instructor.
- Notification must be submitted annually, at the beginning of each school year.

2. Curriculum and Instruction:

- North Dakota homeschooling law does not specify a prescribed curriculum. Parents have the freedom to choose or develop their curriculum and teaching materials.
- However, the curriculum should cover the basic subjects taught in public schools, including reading, writing, mathematics, science, and social studies.

3. Assessment and Evaluation:

- North Dakota does not require standardized testing or assessments for homeschooling students.
- Parents are responsible for evaluating their child's progress. This can be done through various methods, such as portfolio reviews, standardized testing, or assessments by certified teachers.

4. Record-Keeping:

While not mandated by law, it is advisable for homeschooling families to maintain records of their children's academic progress, including attendance, coursework, and any assessments or evaluations conducted.

5. Graduation Requirements:

- Homeschooled students in North Dakota must meet the same graduation requirements as students in public schools to receive a high school diploma.
- These requirements typically include completing a certain number of credits in core subjects and electives.
