If you're considering homeschooling your child in New Mexico, it's essential to understand the state's homeschooling laws and requirements. Here's an overview to help you get started:

1. Notification Requirements:

- New Mexico requires homeschooling families to file a notice of intent to homeschool with the local school district within thirty days of beginning homeschooling.
- The notice should include basic information about the child, such as name, age, and address, as well as a statement of the parent's intent to homeschool.
- Additionally, parents may need to submit an educational plan outlining the educational objectives and materials to be used for the year.

2. Curriculum and Instruction:

- Homeschooling parents in New Mexico have the freedom to choose or create their curriculum. There are no state-mandated requirements regarding the subjects to be taught or the instructional materials to be used.
- However, the curriculum should cover the basic subjects typically taught in public schools, including reading, writing, mathematics, science, and social studies.

3. Assessment and Evaluation:

- New Mexico does not require homeschooling students to undergo standardized testing or assessment.
- However, parents may choose to assess their child's academic progress through various methods, such as portfolio reviews, progress reports, or evaluations by certified teachers.

4. Record-Keeping:

While not explicitly mandated by law, it is advisable for homeschooling families to maintain records of their children's academic progress, including attendance, coursework, and any assessments or evaluations conducted.

5. Graduation Requirements:

- Homeschooled students in New Mexico must meet the same graduation requirements as students in public schools to receive a high school diploma.
- These requirements typically include completing a certain number of credits in core subjects and electives.
