If you're considering homeschooling your child in Nevada, understanding the state's homeschooling laws and requirements is crucial. Here's an overview to help you get started:

1. Notification Requirements:

- Nevada requires homeschooling families to file a notice of intent to homeschool with their local school district or the Nevada Department of Education.
- The notice should include the name, age, and address of the child, as well as the name and address of the parent(s) providing the instruction.
- Parents must submit the notice annually, typically by July 1st or 10 days before beginning homeschooling.

2. Curriculum and Instruction:

- Homeschooling parents in Nevada have the freedom to choose or create their curriculum. There are no state-mandated requirements regarding the subjects to be taught or the instructional materials to be used.
- However, the curriculum should cover the basic subjects typically taught in public schools, including reading, writing, mathematics, science, and social studies.

3. Assessment and Evaluation:

- Nevada does not require homeschooling students to undergo standardized testing or assessment.
- However, parents may choose to assess their child's academic progress through various methods, such as standardized tests, portfolio reviews, or evaluations by certified teachers.

4. Record-Keeping:

While not explicitly mandated by law, it is advisable for homeschooling families to maintain records of their children's academic progress, including attendance, coursework, and any assessments or evaluations conducted.

5. Graduation Requirements:

- Homeschooled students in Nevada must meet the same graduation requirements as students in public schools to receive a high school diploma.
- These requirements typically include completing a certain number of credits in core subjects and electives.
