PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

In the event you remember the tales of Alice's Adventures in Wonderland by Lewis Carroll, you will understand why I recently have started to feel like Alice. During the last month, each day as I wake up to the news headlines, I am sure that I am lost in Wonderland- as in "I wonder what the hell is going on." We seem to have followed a White Rabbit down the rabbit hole to an entirely new world inhabited by strange and evil creatures capable of all sorts of evil deeds. In our world they are called Democrats – some reminiscent of Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum (Cory Booker and Kamala Harris come to mind) and some occasionally even resemble the Cheshire Cat (sorry President Trump).

The true evil at the core of Wonderland is the Queen of Hearts who is only concerned with absolute power and execution – George Soros perhaps, who behind the scenes is the evil force trying to control our government, our way of life, our elections and our entire democracy. As far as I am concerned "Off With His Head".

As I recall, there was also some ridiculous trial in the story about Alice's adventures where someone is falsely accused of stealing the "tarts" (are you following me here?) The jury in the trial feature some of the strangest creatures ever to be named in fiction. Sadly, what we are dealing with each day in our currently political climate is not fiction – it is stranger than and more dangerous than fiction. I am sure that somewhere in our liberal Congress exists the March Hare who is Mad, and the Mad Hatter who is more mad. Diane Feinstein anyone?

The story by Carroll is designed to be nonsense but the lessons are there. I completely relate to the fact that Alice understands she cannot remain fixed in a world that has drastically different rules from her own. The idea of the great puzzle also supports Carroll's notion that life is an unduly complicated mystery and that human beings must use rational thought and intelligence to understand. It is my fervent prayer that on Nov 6th we wake up, as did Alice, to the nonsense that our world is lost in at the moment, find that this was all a bad dream and sanity and reality rule so that we may return to some degree of normalcy.

If that doesn't happen, I will go back to chapter two in the book where Alice finds the bottle labeled "Drink Me" and continue my analogy!

- Dale Thomas, President

A REMINDER FROM THE PRESIDENT:

VOTE ON NOVEMBER 6

There is an error on your election ballot. State politicians intentionally put a false and misleading label on PROP 6. PROP 6 is actually the Gas Tax Repeal. Remember to Vote YES on Prop 6 to repeal the gas and car tax hikes!

NEW MEMBER SPOTLIGHT
Sheila Ruiz

Sheila and Ron, her husband of 34 years, are both natives of Southern CA. They moved to WLW 25 years ago from the San Fernando Valley.

In 1989, Sheila retired from a 25-year career in Marketing and Advertising. In 1992, she and Ron, who both have an extensive background in the arts, began creating elegant bronze sculptures and are now currently represented by fine art galleries across the country, from Hawaii to Key West, FL. They not only share their ideas about the next sculpture they will create, they actually work on each other's images, making their sculptures a true joint project.

Through a friendship with President Dale Thomas, Sheila was inspired by Dale's enthusiasm, passion and positive outlook with regard to the WVRWF. Sheila is excited to be a new member, and to learn and participate in all that the membership offers.

CANDIDATE PROFILEJohn Cox

John Cox is the Republican candidate for California Governor. Like President Trump, John Cox is a businessman, not a politician. Beginning as an accountant, he built his own business worth $200 million with almost 100 employees. As a business owner and Catholic from a lower middle-class economic background, Cox understands the importance of a free market to spur economic growth, education and affordable health care.

This Trump endorsed candidate has made it his mission to remove the red tape in place by lobbyists and politicians that has prevented affordable housing, aggravated homelessness, increased gas prices and destroyed our public education. This pro-lifer is a proponent of Charter Schools, clean energy efforts and securing our border.

“Entitled politicians and the Sacramento special interests who fund them – they’ve rigged the game, trading favors and enriching themselves, while millions of forgotten Californians have been left behind.”

California

Dear Members,

I was so surprised when I read the email from the Westlake Village Republican Women Federated (WVRWF) announcing that Judge Steven Bailey would be the guest speaker. My first thought was, “I know that name!”

The Honorable Steven Bailey is running on November 6, 2018, election for Attorney General. What better candidate could there possibly be and, he’s a Republican! Thrilled to attend another sold-out event, eagerly looking around for a glimpse of this familiar-sounding name to finally put a face to it then suddenly, here comes the judge!

Lady-like roars and loud applause boomed out to welcome this great man and great he is. The first thing he did was apologize for being late due to his long drive from San Diego to Thousand Oaks. It was a speedy crawl through the 405 to the 101 freeways at rush hour to honor his commitment and to make a room full of Republican women happy which says a lot of his character and patience.

As the room focused on the Judge, he was professional yet down-to-earth. His neighborly-like warning speech of what is yet to come including what is now unfolding in California has us all at the edge of our seats. He informed the group he is a proud US Citizen, serving his country, working hard for the American people to keep America moving in the right and ethical direction. He informed the group of his proven record of enforcing our laws -according to our Constitution- and of his plans as Attorney General when elected.

Lastly, he answered questions from the group that touched on illegal immigration, jail overcrowding, and the border. WVRWF thanks Judge Bailey for his attendance and is looking forward to his service as Attorney General for our great nation!

Thank you all for attending and for supporting this great candidate. For more information about Judge Bailey, I would recommend going to his Facebook at: <https://www.facebook.com/judebaileyforAF>

AN EVENING WITH DENNIS PRAGER

By Ariana M. Perfecto

“To be ungrateful to live in the greatest country that humans have ever made is disgusting.”

The largest number of conservative Jews to ever gather in the history of the U.S. came together on the night of October 11 at Valley Beth Shalom in Encino, California, to hear Dennis Prager speak. Prager began speaking about the United States of America the way all patriots do, with tears in his eyes and a lump in his throat.

Comments such as, “I love this county,” were met with standing ovation. The sounds of Jewish, American and conservative pride could undoubtedly be heard from the streets outside and I was very excited to be a witness and to be a part of it.

I first learned of Dennis Prager when I was in college, almost 10 years ago. My cousin, Mike, told me to check out an organization called Prager University. PragerU is a nonprofit organization that creates short videos on various political and economic issues from a conservative perspective - that is, the right perspective. My favorite PragerU video is one in which Gloria Alvarez, a Guatemalan political scientist and radio broadcaster, asked immigrants coming to America: “Why do you support the same policies in the U.S. that caused you to flee your home country?”

Prager asked a similar question of his fellow Jews: “Why do you support a party that wishes you ill?” The backwards way of thinking that characterizes the Left was the focus of Prager’s speech at Valley Beth Shalom.

“There are no words to describe my deep disappointment in so many of my fellow American Jews for being on the left; not for being liberal, but for being Leftist....How does a Jew support the Left? The seed of Jew hatred on earth, today. How do you do that?”

And what often accompanies irrational thought is irrational action. Prager expressed his disgust with the mob behavior of the Left and pointed out how differently the Right reacted when Barack Obama was elected, possibly the worst president in U.S. history, and then re-elected.

“They can’t imagine that we are as disgusted with Barack Obama’s presidency as they are with Donald Trump’s presidency. Because, we act civilly when we are disgusted. We didn’t blow bridges, and didn’t blow tunnels, and didn’t smash windows, and didn’t break down businesses and didn’t surround democrats in a restaurant.”

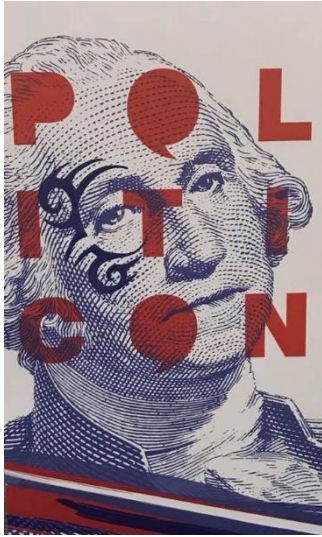

A tendency of some individuals on the Right, of which I am also guilty, is to seek to rationalize the Left by giving them the benefit of the doubt. We tell ourselves, “They mean well.” Even Ben Shapiro, a tough Orthodox Jew and conservative, regularly states on his podcast that he believes that most people on the Left are sincere.

Alternatively, Prager stated, “meaning well doesn’t mean a damn thing! The road to hell is paved with good intentions.... That they are sincere is of no interest to me.” This is a great reminder. As conservatives, we tend to be more civil and forgiving. We do not scream at the top of our lungs or resort to mob violence when we do not get our way. This is part of what makes the Right, right. But we cannot, in the name of civility, give the Left a free pass to run roughshod over our American values. That is how we got 8 years of Obama. We must be firm in our fight for the Judeo-Christian values upon which Western civilization was built.

Dennis Prager ended the evening with this greatest of all messages: “Prepare the world under God’s rule.” As Jews and Christians, this is our task. Only people without God could possibly believe the lies of the Left. “If all the Jewish professors at universities taught this, America would be in better shape.”

POLITICON 2018

By Andrew Kelinsky

As is often the case, I was not in charge of my day nor my schedule. Believe me, walking around a convention center is not how I typically spend my Sundays. However, on October 21, 2018, that is exactly what I was doing. Semi-sleep deprived, prideful, and convicted, I explored the arena with a curiosity and keenness I had not felt in quite some time. I was intrigued by the different booths and the background noise of teenagers debating the topic of global warming.

I agreed to go to Politicon with my girlfriend. Like any wise man, I let her be in charge; and we attended the day on which well-known conservative pundits and activists were speaking. The set-up was as expected. Booths with different information, merchandise being sold, and different activities filled most of the open area. Sadly, I did not get a photo with the baby Trump balloon.

As much as I enjoyed the offerings in the common space, I dreaded the upcoming talks as it required listening to other peoples' ideas. (I like the sound of my own voice; however, both my girlfriend and the amalgamation of attendees seemed more interested in what the speakers had to say.) Much to my surprise, I thoroughly enjoyed listening to fellow conservatives talk about a variety of issues and accurately blame leftist ideology as the primary cause. In classic fashion, Shapiro pointed out how the left is threatening Americans' first amendment rights; Tucker Carlson discussed his new book Ship of Fools; a panel of pundits from the Daily Wire -- headlining Shapiro and comically omitting the introduction of Michael Knowles -- took questions from the audience; and Carlson closed the day with a discussion with the leader of the Young Turks.

Yet, I found myself most intrigued by a debate held between Sam Seder -- comedian, actor, and progressive talk-radio show host -- and Charlie Kirk -- founder of Turning Point USA, a conservative non-profit that aims primarily to educate college students on true-free market principles. The topic of the debate: "Is Trump good for the middle class?"

My head swirled with many unrelated thoughts. "Are they going to discuss Trump's new tax law?" "How can Seder deny that Trump being in office has improved America's economy?" "It'll be so nice to go to a debate where right-wingers are the audience." No more than 5 minutes into the debate, Seder and Kirk already managed to disagree. Much to my surprise, liberals and left-wingers filled the room just as much as, if not more than, my fellow right-wingers. What was Christmas morning quickly turned into a tense Thanksgiving dinner.

Quickly enraged by the childish behavior of liberal supporters and dismissive rhetorical retorts by Seder, I remembered why conservative monetary policy is so important. In an age when we are a nation divided and most of the attention is on social issues involving race and gender, the question of economics is one that has seemingly been overlooked. The debate between Seder and Kirk reminded me that we are not just fighting for our rights, we are fighting for our livelihoods and the livelihoods of our families.

The debate consisted of the following:

Tax and Spending Cuts

The debate started by Seder pointing out that Trump's tax cuts are going to fail as spending has not changed, and he pointed to the failed tax and spending cuts by Brownback in Kansas. Seder slyly also contended that Brownback failed the state by shrinking the government. Kirk retorted by pointing to the failed states of California and Illinois and to the prosperity of Texas and Florida, illustrating both the importance of decentralized authority and sound economics.

Kirk conceded that spending cuts need to couple the tax cuts, and immediately Seder claimed that cutting social security and Medicare is problematic. Seder is wrong. Social security and Medicare taxes cripple the middle class. These taxes cut earnings for individuals and businesses by 6.2% each or 12.4% combined.

Let's take an example of an average American who makes $40,000 a year and works for 40 years. This person will have spent just under $100,000 on these taxes. Obviously, $100,000 is an expenditure over the course of a lifetime. The problem, however, has to do with return on investment. If the person could invest this money and get an average annual return of 5%, this person will have had more funds available to cover medical and retirement costs. Additionally, businesses must pay 6.2% per employee. When these costs are extrapolated across different demographics, wage amounts, and businesses, it becomes easy to understand the damage social security had and continues to have on America's economy. Until social security programs promise a comparable return year over year where Americans are receiving their cash, social security is doing more harm than good.

Wealth Inequality

Seder had the gall to contend that there was more growth and less stagnation of wages under Barack Obama than Donald Trump. Seder insisted that the wealth gap is growing, as indicated by the unaffordability of housing. Kirk responded by explaining that Seder's data was incomplete as he was not considering the growth of pension funds for government employees. Kirk also pointed to the rising costs of property taxes and development as part of the reason for the increase in housing prices and the decline in homeownership. (Public pension funds and other similar investments are often handled by firms such as Goldman Sachs, so the growth of these funds is not measured by government statistics.)

Seder ignored these points entirely. As a side note, the economy under Barack Obama dropped to all-time lows. Turning the economy around is like someone losing weight. When obese, it is easy to lose 100 pounds whereas for an elite athlete, losing weight and gaining muscle is a much more difficult endeavor. The economy improving more drastically under Obama compared to Trump is a meaningless comparison. Without mentioning or giving context, Seder grossly misled a room filled with young minds.

Next, Seder contended that one person getting wealthy meant taking wealth from someone else. He used the example of Amazon being a business with no competitors and stock buybacks as a big contribution to the growing gap in wealth. Kirk argued that money from businesses gets re-distributed into the economy through dividends and other forms of payouts. Seder said these monies were just going to executives, which is why the stock buy backs are a problem. Kirk and Seder went back and forth with some stats and called each other liars. Theoretically, Kirk is right, but it is difficult to come up with any real determination as to how much of an effect buy backs have on the economy and what percentage of earnings get re-injected into the economy after distributions.

Regulations on Big Business and the Great Recession

Naturally, contention over the amount of necessary regulation for businesses and the Great Recession followed. Seder contended that markets fail to allow for competition, pointing to Amazon as an example. He concluded regulation is necessary to breed competition. Kirk responded by pointing to regulations as unnecessary barriers to entry, which prevent the start of small businesses that eventually grow into larger businesses that can compete with the Amazons of the world.

Seder then pointed to the repeal of The Glass-Steagall act as causing the Great Recession. Kirk agreed that the repeal was a problem but added that the main issue was the inaccurate rating of bonds by Fannie Mae & Freddie Mac. Seder tried to use histrionics and rhetoric as means to deal with failed regulation by government agencies. Seder blamed investment firms for making bad loans and blamed wealth, greed, and free markets as the primary drivers of the economic downturn in the mid-2000s. Kirk continued to hound him with the point that the loans and investments were problematic in so far as the ratings mislead investors. Kirk pointed out that taking advantage of an opportunity is very different than failing to do a job or stealing.

Trade Policy

Kirk and Seder quickly switched gears and provided some lip service, but no real substance on trade policy. Seder criticized how Trump handled threats made against China and related tariffs on steel. He claimed the tariffs facilitated job loss and unemployment. Kirk did not address Seder on this topic as he wanted to discuss healthcare.

Healthcare

Seder took issue with the repeal of Obamacare and a free market in healthcare. Kirk argued that healthcare is too regulated, which is why insurance companies do not cross state lines. Seder responded by stating insurance companies could cross state lines but don't because they are unfamiliar with the market. Seder pointed to the Mercatus study and Nordic countries as examples of effective healthcare budgeting and systems. Kirk pointed out the high tax rates of the Nordic countries, which Seder never addressed but seemed to have no issue with the concept. Kirk did not mention that part of the effectiveness of the Nordic healthcare system stems from the small(er) and overall health of the Nordic people. This is where the debate ended.

Although, it is difficult to know with certainty, as conservatives tended to listen to Seder's arguments and just waited for Kirk to disprove them, Kirk's youth and inexperience showed as Seder had better control of the crowd. My conclusion? Conservative and right-winged (monetary) policy is more effective for both practical and philosophical reasons, which would require another piece to discuss.

In the words of Thomas Sowell, "The first lesson of economics is scarcity: there is never enough of anything to fully satisfy all those who want it. The first lesson of politics is to disregard the first lesson of economics."

Andrew Kelinsky is a licensed C.P.A. He currently works for a company as in-house accountant, and as the CFO of a start-up.
