

IMPACT JUSTICE SELECTED TO SUPPORT COMMISSION

The D.C. Police Reform Commission is pleased to announce that Impact Justice has been selected to provide support to the Commission. A national innovation and research center with an office in Washington, D.C., Impact Justice works to foster more humane, responsive, and restorative systems of justice in America. With a track record of developing new solutions to longstanding problems of injustice, targeting interventions and recommendations to reflect best practices and other standards, enlisting government officials in transformative change, and uniting diverse stakeholders in common purpose to realize shared goals, Impact Justice is an ideal working partner for the Commission.

Impact Justice has assembled a diverse team of highly experienced professionals to support the Commission. They include career law enforcement professionals known for progressive reform, people with experience overseeing police in the context of federal litigation, and individuals highly skilled in parsing law enforcement data and conducting related research. Equally important, the team features individuals with firsthand experience developing community-based alternatives to police enforcement to stem the overcriminalization of Black Americans in particular and save lives. The organization as a whole and select team members also bring experience supporting previous high-profile commissions and task forces. The team is spearheaded by Impact Justice President Alex Busansky.

Impact Justice was selected through a competitive process. In early September, a solicitation was developed and noticed to provide the Commission with staffing and expert support. A review panel was assembled to score every proposal and ultimately identified Impact Justice as the top candidate.

The Impact Justice team will introduce themselves to the community at the D.C. Police Reform Commission meeting on October 19, 2020 at 6:30 p.m. via Zoom. Details of the meeting will be posted on the Commission's website soon.
