THE HOUSE ENTERS THE RECORD

LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN AVE. / LOS ANGELES

On April 17, 2026, Milenio published an investigation by Angel Hernandez describing a Los Angeles fentanyl operation tied to three clandestine laboratory locations. Two locations were searched by authorities in 2024. A third, Milenio reported, was identified to LAPD by another informant at a short-term rental on Lookout Mountain Avenue.

According to Milenio, police did not reach that third location before it had been dismantled and the suspects had left. That distinction matters: the house is part of the reported investigative record, but the publicly available reporting does not describe a police seizure there comparable to the first two sites.

ESN RULE: Do not turn an informant lead into a completed raid. The interesting fact is precisely that the third location was gone before police got there.

ONE NETWORK. THREE LOCATIONS.

01 SOUTH GRAND AVENUE

Milenio reports LAPD searched the first site on Feb. 21, 2024. Authorities found seven kilograms of fentanyl, weapons, false identity documents, presses, molds and other drugs. The reporting also describes fentanyl being dried in a dehydrating machine.

02 SOUTH FIGUEROA AVENUE

The second site surfaced after LAFD responded to a fire. Milenio reports more than eight kilograms of fentanyl, mixing equipment, scales, chemical agents, presses and surveillance video showing activity inside the lab.

03 LOOKOUT MOUNTAIN AVENUE

A separate informant reportedly alerted LAPD to a third site. Milenio says police did not arrive before the location was dismantled and the suspects fled. The property was described as an Airbnb rental.

15 KG Milenio reports roughly 15 kilograms of fentanyl were recovered from the first two locations combined. That total does not include a seizure from the third house.

MILENIO CONNECTS THE DOTS

The broadcast graphic reads "NARCOLABORATORIOS EN EU" and the lower-third says fentanyl laboratories operate in the United States, with criminal cases revealing drug production in California. The accompanying article says two court records obtained by Milenio documented clandestine laboratories where fentanyl was synthesized and pressed.

Borderland Beat republished an English-language version the same day under the headline "Fentanyl Made in the U.S.: How Clandestine Labs Operate Within the Country," preserving the three-lab account and the Lookout Mountain reference.

WHAT A SEARCHED LAB LOOKED LIKE

MILENIO BROADCAST FRAME / EQUIPMENT SHOWN IN THE REPORT

Milenio's account of the searched locations describes presses, molds, mixers, scales, chemical agents and other processing equipment. Surveillance footage from the second location, the article says, showed members of the alleged operation mixing and selling drugs.

That evidence belongs to the first two searched locations. ESN is not treating this machinery as proof of what was physically present inside the Lookout Mountain house.

THE COMPLAINT EXISTS

UNITED STATES v. TANSUVIT et al.

Central District of California / Criminal complaint filed Sept. 3, 2024

A publicly indexed federal criminal complaint identifies Suppatra "Susie" Tansuvit, Eric "E" William Hanson and James Bertrand Tinsley as defendants in case 2:24-mj-05348-DUTY. Milenio says its April 2026 reporting drew on two judicial files and quotes a U.S. Postal Inspection Service investigator describing short-term rental properties allegedly used for drug mixing, sales and identity-document activity.

IMPORTANT LIMIT

A criminal complaint contains allegations, not a conviction. The April 2026 Milenio article is reporting from court materials; where ESN has not independently obtained and matched a specific paragraph of the complaint to the third-house claim, this issue attributes that claim to Milenio rather than silently upgrading it to an independently verified fact.

THE THREAD THAT PREDATES THE DRUG CASE

LAPD publicly identified Tansuvit in 2019 in an identity-theft investigation, years before the 2024 federal complaint. That older public record is relevant because Milenio's account describes the later network as also using identity theft and short-term rentals.

WHAT WE KNOW / WHAT WE DON'T

SUPPORTED BY THE SOURCES REVIEWED

- + Milenio published the investigation on April 17, 2026.
- + It described a Los Angeles network with three clandestine-lab locations.
- + The first two locations were searched and yielded fentanyl and laboratory equipment, according to the report.
- + Milenio identified a Lookout Mountain Avenue short-term rental as the third location, based on the investigative record it reviewed.
- + Milenio reported that police arrived too late to search that third site before it was dismantled.
- + Borderland Beat republished the account in English on April 17.

NOT ESTABLISHED BY THESE SOURCES ALONE

- That police personally observed fentanyl production inside the third house.
- That the equipment shown in the Milenio broadcast was photographed at the third house.
- That the house's current owner or occupants had any connection to the alleged 2024 operation.
- That every characterization in secondary reporting has been independently confirmed by ESN.

THE THIRD LAB IS THE GAP

The first two sites leave seizures, equipment and surveillance behind. The third enters the public story differently: an informant, a location, a short-term rental, and a police response that came after the site had already been cleared.

That does not make the third house less important. It makes the evidentiary boundary more important. The responsible question is not "what can we make this house prove?" It is: what exactly did investigators know about it, when did they know it, and what survives in the underlying record?
