Training the Next Generation of Doctors

PROUDLY ENTERING A NEW ERA AS AN ACADEMIC MEDICAL CENTER

For more than 70 years, Maury Regional Health has stood as a trusted, not-for-profit health partner — caring for our friends, families and neighbors. What began as a small community hospital has grown into a comprehensive regional health system driven by a deep-rooted commitment to the people we serve.

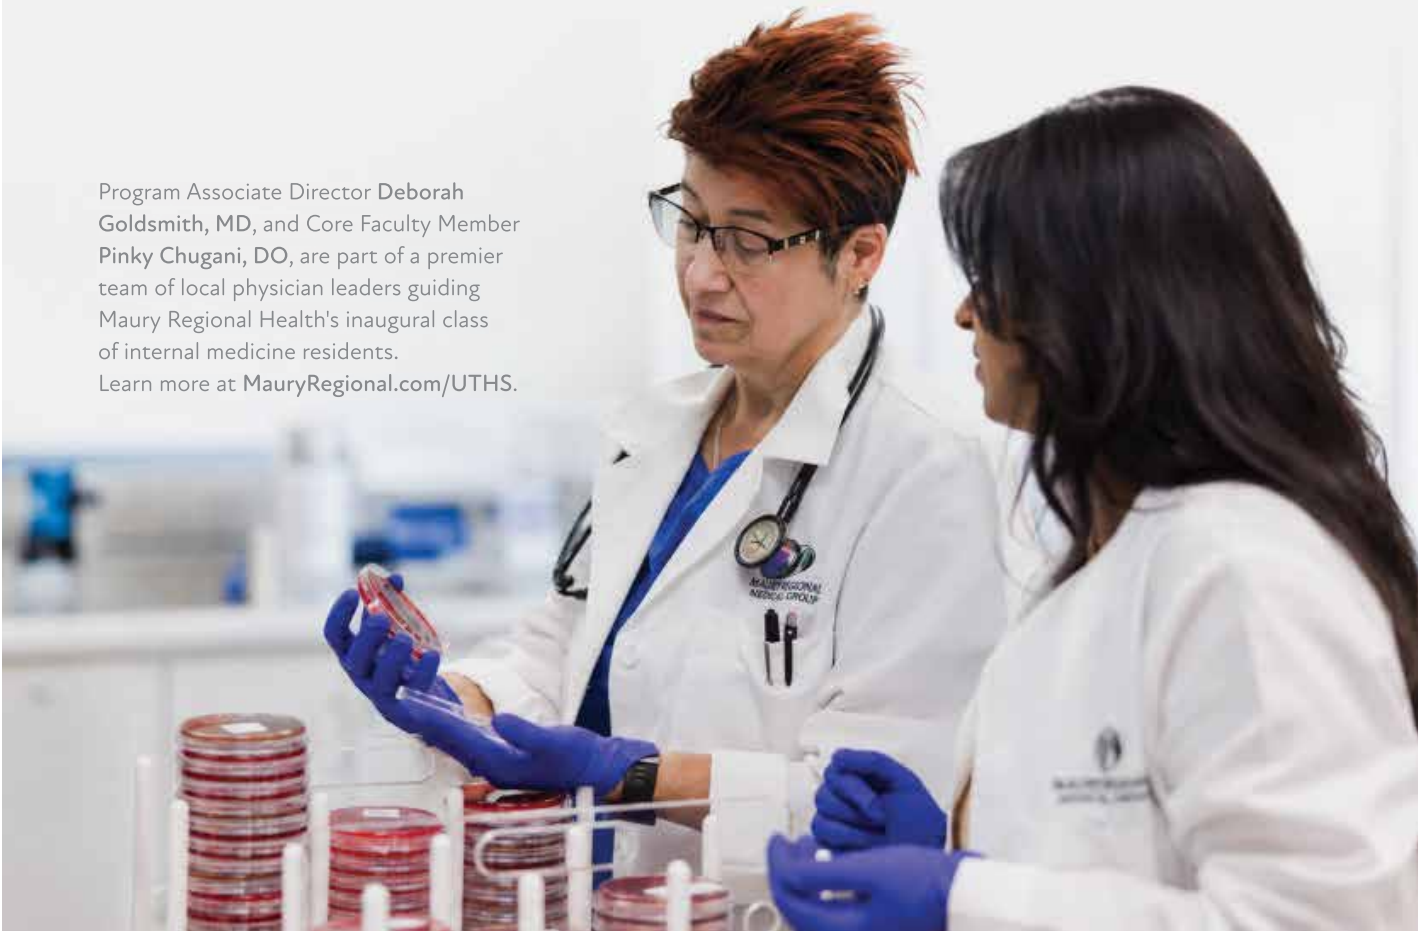

Now, we've taken our next historic step by evolving into an academic medical center. In partnership with University of Tennessee Health Sciences, we have launched an Internal Medicine Residency Program to bridge advanced medical training with our legacy of clinical excellence.

It is a great privilege to mentor these medical leaders of tomorrow who will learn here, grow here and ensure that world-class care always remains close to home.

MAURY INTERNAL MEDICINE RESIDENCY PROGRAM

Program Associate Director Deborah Goldsmith, MD, and Core Faculty Member Pinky Chugani, DO, are part of a premier team of local physician leaders guiding Maury Regional Health's inaugural class of internal medicine residents. Learn more at MauryRegional.com/UTHS.

ARCHITECTS OF OUR HISTORY

PAM WINDSOR

As America celebrates 250 years since its Declaration of Independence, Columbia is marking the anniversary by highlighting some of its own trailblazers who've helped shape history.

With the help of Maury County Archives and the African American Heritage Society of Maury County, the city has compiled a list of 26 Architects of History and placed them on banners throughout downtown and inside City Hall. These are people who made a variety of significant contributions that helped move the country forward in one way or another.

"Although we're calling them architects of history, they're not literally architects," explains Kellye Murphy, the City of Columbia's tourism and marketing director. "You have everything from school teachers to political figures to religious figures. It runs the gamut.

I'm amazed by how it can be the most obscure individual you might not think played an influential role, but if you dig deeper, the things they've done were pivotal and life-changing in so many ways."

Those featured on the banners include Dr. Lucius Hough Gilmore, who became one of the first African American commissioned military officers in Tennessee. He served in World War I and was honored for his bravery on the front lines in France.

Edward Franklin "Pop" Geers played a dominant role in American Harness Racing. Among his many achievements, he set a record with a horse named Napoleon Direct in 1916 when the thoroughbred ran a mile in just under two minutes.

And James Polk, who would become America's 11th President, served from 1845 to 1849. It was during Polk's term that California was ceded to the United States. That was in 1848, the year the gold rush began. Polk announced the discovery of the valuable mineral during his final State of the Union address.

The city has set up a website at Columbia250USA.com that tells more about these innovators, visionaries, and pioneers.

"We hope people will be moved or at least curious and go to the website," Murphy says. "I have a lot of respect for the people on these banners. I think about the courage it takes in a lot of situations to step forward and do the right thing or do what's best for your community. It's not always easy."

The website will serve as a clearing house for 250 events throughout Columbia and Maury County this year. Anyone planning an America 250 event is encouraged to share that information with the city.

Murphy, who has worked to market and promote Columbia tourism for the past nine years, says it's a special place with a rich history and people who are incredibly proud of their heritage.

"Our job is to inspire people to visit Columbia. And that comes with great stories and having a destination that has a true sense of place. You feel that identity when you're here, you feel the pride of the people, and hopefully, you feel welcome. So, it's not even really promoting it, just sharing the great stories and events going on here."

Photography by Michael Tedesco

The Architects of History banners will remain in place through November 1st, giving everyone a chance to learn more about the special people who made Columbia and Maury County what they are today.

3D SUPPLY & MORE

“When I want to buy something, I want to see it, touch it and then bring it home,” begins Kim Proctor, owner of 3D Supply & More, which recently opened its doors at 4910 Main St. in Spring Hill. That helps explain why Proctor is offering visitors the chance to come in and learn the ins and outs of 3D printing.

“I’m looking to attract people who want to get into 3D printing and see the printers in operation,” he adds. “If you come in and see what can be done with a 3D printer, you’ll see why I envision every household having one, much like every household has a microwave.”

With the opening of 3D Supply & More, area residents can now walk in and take home a Flashforge printer, or a Creality printer, not to mention all the accessories that go with them. This as opposed to waiting for product to arrive in the mail.

“You can go online and order a 3D printer from WalMart.com, but they are a third-party seller. The printer has to be shipped from the manufacturer, and it typically takes two to three weeks to get a machine,” offers Proctor.

Likewise, it isn’t easy to get filament locally.

“There are only three retailers in a 40-mile radius of our store that sell filament,” explains Proctor, referring to the raw material that is used to print 3D objects. “We have 5,000 rolls and 20 different types of filament—including glow-in-the-dark, translucent, matte and gloss—in a wide variety of colors. Any color you can think of, we probably have it,” he relates, obviously looking to attract the customer who currently orders filament online.

3D printing enthusiasts will also have the opportunity to purchase Willy’s 3D filament and Tinmorry 3D filament at the five Old School Vapor stores Proctor owns in Williamson and Maury counties, referring to it as a great opportunity to “cross-pollinate” his stores.

Longer-term, Proctor says 3D Supply & More is also planning to print unique items to sell.

“We’re going to offer some items that I think people will buy when they see them, like college- themed mailbox flags. Instead of having a (generic) mailbox flag, we’re going to print mailbox flags that have an orange ‘T’ on the end, or an Alabama ‘A’—the kind of things that people don’t even know they need,” he says.

That said, Proctor recognizes that education will play a major role in his store’s success.

“I will heavily be involved in schools, because I want kids to learn 3D printing. I want to go to the state of Tennessee and to the Williamson County schools to try to introduce an elective class on 3D printing,” says Proctor.

“Also, both of the companies I am buying from, have an education program,” he continues. “On our website (tn3dfilament.com) we have instructional videos from the manufacturers, as well as videos from a few YouTubers. We will have a database so that people can watch a couple videos, get a printer out of the box, and be printing in 20 minutes.”

That kind of education is invaluable, and can minimize the chance of failed 3D print jobs, while also minimizing the risk of a difficult unboxing experience.

Proctor promises that with the help of his staff—including his general manager and assistant manager—he’ll have newbies printing household items in no time.

“Just the other day, I needed something to hang my Weed Eater on. You can go print something and have your Weed Eater hanging on it in an hour. It’s that handy,” says Proctor, about 3D printing technology.

Last but not least, Proctor wants to find a few 3D printing enthusiasts to come work in the store part-time.

“I’m hoping the store will attract some heavy 3D hobbyists who want to come in and educate and want to print & play and make money at it,” he says. Likely the kind of person who is interested in printing their own designs, much like the store’s owner.

“I really like printing prototypes,” concludes Proctor. “I’m heavy into the CAD (Computer-Aided Design) part of it where I can design my own stuff and then print it.”
