About us

Loulou LOLLIPOP is a Canadian company run and founded by twin sisters Eleanor and Angel. We like to think of our silicone teethers and pacifier clips as chewable “candy,” hence the LOLLIPOP in our name. More importantly, though, we are a family business committed to making babies and parents happy. We hope our goods will help you dream big, have fun, and share many sweet and cherished adventures.

We live for the extra special in both design and function. We’re constantly experimenting with fun, innovative ways to make our goods refreshingly new as they stand the test of time. All our products, from silicone teethers to muslin blankets, are ASTM, CPSC and CPSIA compliant to meet local and international safety standards. And, because accessibility is key, we make sure they’re of the most stellar quality at the fairest prices.

Find our silicone teethers, pacifier clips and muslin blankets, and other baby goods at Nordstrom, Anthropologie, Crate and Barrel, Pottery Barn Kids, and 1000+ specialty gift and baby stores in North America.

Why Loulou Lollipop Muslin?

Why muslin, and why is Loulou Lollipop's muslin so soft?

Swaddling is a term that every new parent learns almost immediately. Wrapping your baby up like a little burrito can mimic the security of the womb and help limit his or her startle reflex (that jerky movement of the arms and legs, common in the first five months of life). Choosing the right blanket for swaddling can help promote better sleep by mimicking the gentle, warm environment similar to that of the womb.

Muslin dates back to ancient times, and remains popular today because it is natural and breathable. Unlike other synthetic materials which can trap a baby's body heat and prohibit movement, Loulou Lollipop's muslin is an incredibly soft and breathable fabric made from a combination of rayon from bamboo and cotton. It's freely woven, allowing heat to escape and fresh air to enter so your baby can be comfortable and calm.

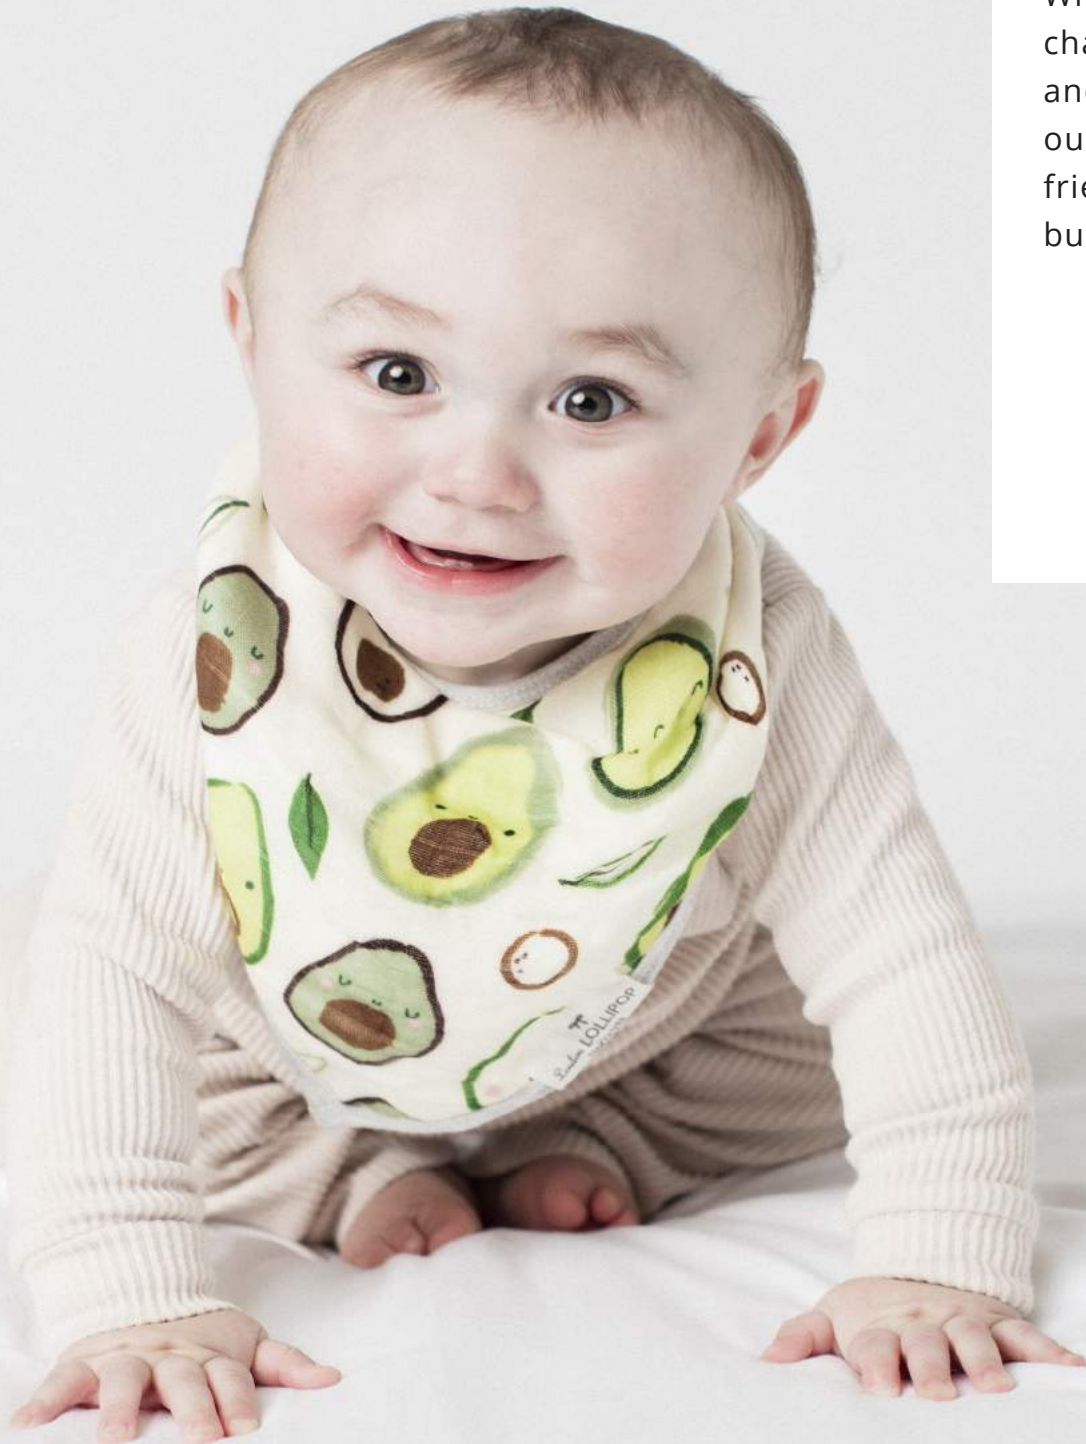

In addition, most of our muslins are printed digitally with ASO-free dye to reduce the environmental footprint, and providing the softest touch to your baby's delicate skin, because your baby deserves the BEST!
