About the Lucky Irish Penny

In the mid 1920s, the Irish government appointed a committee to develop the design for the new Irish coins. Chaired by Irish poet William Butler Yeats, the group decided that the Celtic harp, the national symbol of Ireland, would be used on the new coins and the reverse side would feature a series of farm animals so important to Ireland’s mainly agricultural economy.

After the last minting of the pennies in 1968, the pennies were being gathered and melted down for their copper content. The few remaining pennies are the lucky ones; they survived. For the next thirty-five years the pennies were stashed away by Irish collectors. The remaining few pennies have since found their way across the Atlantic to become the keepsake of Irish heritage.

We combined the imagery from both sides of the famous penny – a Celtic harp and a hen protecting her four young chicks – to create our Irish Penny Pub logo.
