

RAVEN TEST REPORT

The Raven's Progressive Matrices Test is a nonverbal test typically used in measuring abstract reasoning. It is regarded as an estimator of 'fluid intelligence,' which is defined as the capacity to reason and solve novel problems independent of any prior knowledge. It allows you to solve problems that you have not previously encountered, identify patterns and relationships that underpin these problems, and extrapolate solutions using both inductive and deductive logic. Fluid intelligence is therefore necessary for all logical problem solving.

Your age adjusted IQ score is 156 and the average score for all test takers is 98.4.

You have the ability to think critically, conceptualize ideas and form your own conclusions. Your ability to think in patterns and to produce order out of chaos enables you to handle complexities and see logic in everything. Needless to say, you are self-aware of your abilities and have the brains for all known occupations. If you think of intelligence as the ability to adapt easily to new situations then you are at the top of the charts.
