

© Matthew Paul Morrison

With exception of the front cover image, all parts of this book, in part or in whole, may be reproduced, transmitted, or utilized, in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage or retrieval system, without permission from the author or publisher - provided author and source title is cited. Cover image may be used in reviews, and all rights are reserved.

www.AirstreamAshram.com

Contact: 619.823.4306

AirstreamAshram@fastmail.com

ISBN 9798339501565

Cover Photo by Mike Boden

About the Author Photo's by Brian McHugh

Americana Parables of Diner and Road

AIRSTREAM ASHRAM

A PLAYGROUND GODDRAMA

Essential be-ing found in oneness

THE ONLY TRIP THAT MATTERS

Of all the Airstreams floating in the flood, which one are we... and which soul expression will we choose? In choice, we build new incarnate trance stories, naming ourselves anything we please. We're Airstream Souls - free to travel. Here in the RV, everything is born of thought, and landscapes appear through mind.

In the driver's seat reflecting, we inquire, 'What's thought's role?'

On the road, oneness flirts in the 'identity' playground. Stepping outside; there's timeless, distinction-less, cause and effect-less experience. Turning, we see the trance of our recreational vehicle, and its once overly magnified reflection of purpose.

Airstreams host infinite identities. So as long as there's even one RV, the road stretches eternally. Because we know our soul's not identity, and identity's not ego, our unlearning shows us that not every two-armed driver should be considered human. Although appearing as 'one of our own', a body may be populated by numerous observers. Some are without soul; overall wearing angels, RV driving demons, and robotic roadway waitresses. From our eyes, a being's shape isn't definitive of what's within - despite the hats & glasses.

Farmer, preacher, professor, motorcycle repairman, trans-dimensional spirit, exotic dancer, politician, trash man, RV salesman, sibling, and even the self are but experiential playgrounds for the dualistic soul.

Our Airstream travels become convenient distinctions stuck in their description. Elevating the narrative, we know the soul is never spirit, but spirit is soul! For within duality, any distinction is a portal for the observer, process of observing, and observed. Sigilized things are breathed to life, recognized as roadside attractions.

Occasionally, being seat-belted prohibits us from watching identity's mirage fade. Setting camp, wind ripples in the trailers' awning... reminding us that movement's a symptom of thought. Out the window we see other RV's with their own stories. Images and feelings are subjectively constructed within National Park boundaries, brought to sensation by its receiver, the be-ing. This light is information streaming from other Wills, and experienced as trailers, railroad warning bells, hot coffee, moving clouds, mountains, universes, souls, suns, and any-thing outside that ends up recognized by eyes, ears, and senses. Sound, light, and touch are mere sensations. Frequencies going here to there reveal 'agreements' - the desire of wills residing in ecology as remnants of consent.

On the highway of experience, the trunk of assumptions is opened. The perception of 'world' is the illusory-like landscape we choose. The stories of old are dusty dreams, desires, hopes, and machinations of vehicle operators who came before. Driving in the present, we're spirit travelers peering at soul's map. Engines rumbling - our hearts give and receive, unconcerned with perceived difference. Cruising with open windows, beliefs are tools, thoughts and emotions chose, and breezy goals ephemeral.

Beginnings and ends lead to the playground of souls. Our awareness laughs at itself, knowing it's just self-realization on glorious vacation.

Reach into the glove box

Airstream/Trailers/RV/Recreational Vehicle - A metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Being - A term that infers 'to be' (be-ing). This is characterized by self-awareness (consciousness), but not necessarily self-realization.

Belief - The word 'belief' is specifically identified as representing thoughts, thought-forms (larger belief-systems with sigilized symbology), grander egregore belief systems with servitor characteristics, and the super-entranced god-form belief systems that build powerful reflections of inflamed ego while minimizing that particular soul (or group of souls) ability to become present in no-thought and no-mind.

Eddy - Represents all aspects of the trance state within duality. An eddy may or may not be realized by those within it as a symptom of the dualistic playground experience.

Ego - Natural ego refers to the choice to play in the landscape of distinctions for entertainment. This is characterized by the 'will to live and survival instinct (often mistaken as fear)', 'desire and needs', as well as 'thought and distinction'. Inflamed ego refers to the consequences of a choice made from a soul (see def) to attempt to view its creations and/or the creations of other Wills as greater than the Absolute-self.

Flood - The Absolute, the Tao, the Essential Nature

Human - Within the parables and allegories, the term 'human' refers to a perception that oneself, or those 'like you' are distinctly unique from other labels and creations of mind, thought, and belief that you have imagined and consented.

Illusory-like - Used to denote that the strict definition of 'illusion' is not adequate to fully describe in normally used temporal words (note: all words are temporal)

Journey/Roadway/Road/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Light - The subjective sensation and interpretation an observer may make when information is delivered from other thought-forms (see def). This 'light' may be subjectively experienced as 'red, green, blue, yellow, orange, purple, indigo, and other frequency sensations the mutual wills have consciously or unconsciously agreed upon'. 'Light' is a sensation, the resulting feeling one gets when receiving the Will of another creator. We 'see' what we have consented to 'see' and what we are then 'tuned'.

Maps - A 'fractal singularity' where all things are overlapped, including but not limited to any experience, concept, object, time, distinction, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process. Used as a term to form contrast for the metaphor 'Territory'.

Overalls - An item of clothing that represents the aspects of the personality that are thought of as being the real you, but are nothing but symptoms of an experience.

Playground - The term used to describe the optimal experience of duality. This Playground is the 'place' and 'vantage' of having a mastery over the relative dualistic world, and walking in the peace of the 'Absolute' (see def).

Roads - A metaphor for the experiences within the temporal distinctions of thought, space, and time. The beginning and end of these experiences may be labeled with the transient distinctions of life and death.

Sigil - A segregated awareness that is created through thought by another awareness. All sigils are conjured. (see servitor, egregore, Godform)

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Things - Any experience, personality, concept, object, distinction, time, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Thought - From the absolute vantage, the first distinction is thought.

Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Vehicle operators, Driver, Passengers' all refer to the 'Small-Self' - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego. The 'small-self' perceives through the templates created by itself and other Wills. The small-self can be completely entranced or be partially emancipated in its view.

Even at roadside eateries, aromas of unlearning waft...

FEEDING THE WAFFLE HOUSE EGO

Remember when our trailers crossed paths, creating deeper ways to make our travels seem constructed by the gears of cause and effect? We sat at the roadside grill, convincing others to join the fantasy of forgetting our souls were subordinate to spirit, and those in nearby booths to believe the complete self was a mechanical cog without absolute grace. Hankering for deep fried vittles, we manipulated others, solidifying their belief that bodies and trailers were servos, particles, veins, waves, mitochondria, and pistons whirling about.

Yep, we convinced customers and waitresses they were tall stacks of flapjacks dripping with bio-chemically evolved maple syrup. From this, many patrons ignore-ant of culinary science's limitations found themselves judging their value from deep-booth... where the implication of significance and insignificance led to more fattening delights.

What were we really hungry for?

Why did we need a 3D Diner experience to appear so real?

Why did we want everyone 'else' to forget their original ingredients?

And why did bacon smell so good?

Because friend, if the customers viewed themselves as accidents, the existence of Will would be obscured. For 'Waffle House Humanity' to remain ignorant, it needed to consider itself mechanical... by use of convenient, myopic reflections of gravy reduction.

Inflamed attachment became the griddle to cook down the patrons light-creations. This, so our egos could be advertised top-menu. This is how we got away with eating hash browns off others plates, and drinking their beer without thanks. We served ourselves in how we manipulated others.

Yet one day in insatiable hunger, having spent as much time in bathroom as booth, the mirror revealed our distended guts! Repulsed, we barely squeezed out and back into the dining area. Bellies bulging, we couldn't digest another serving. Letting go of ego-gluttony, we headed for the Waffle House door.

Significance and insignificance sizzled behind us.

Bursting from the exit, the smell of sausage and melted butter faded. In the fresh air we discovered science, religion, logic, reason, and perception were conveniences with transient aroma... a knowing we'd hid from ourselves - with no one else to blame. Heck, even inside the Waffle House test-kitchen, the scientific method only disproved. That's why prior recipes were charred.

Chicken Cordon Bleu couldn't be served at truck stops. Where souls gorged on the fast food of other creators 'light', more Waffle Houses appeared on the horizon.

Speeding away, fresh brewed realizations drifted as we declared;

"At the Waffle House, I no longer give my power to a science that has no ability to 'prove'. Mind meals of intellectualism are menu items unable to feed the dimension-less. I am present and satisfied with my own hash browns. I leash the ego outside the restaurant; no longer serving self-facing sunny side up thought-forms, swallowing side orders of reason down the throat of my small-self, or ladle spoonfuls of significance and insignificance. In my choice, I refuse to over-salt the perception of others."

So now when dining at roadside eateries, we ask adjacent customers if they consider themselves 'rational eaters'. Upon a nod and napkin wipe, we'll inquire what the 'scientific method' is, and if it can 'prove' anything. We wait, as it's likely they, including most restaurant critics will insist it has. We smile, amused that the most intelligent have made that choice.

Sipping our coffee, we've got nothing to convince or persuade.

Evidently, bacon does smell that good.

Munch Some Metaphors

Deep Fried Vittles - Represent the thought-forms and events that allow for the solidifying of ego.

Humanity - Within the parables and allegories, the term 'humanity' refers to a perception that oneself, or those 'like you' are distinctly unique from other labels and creations of mind, thought, and belief that you have imagined and consented.

Light Creations - A thought 'created' concept implying its own existence and the solidity of time when there is none.

RV Park - A metaphor for a gathering of fractionalized souls (physical and energetic 'bodies') who are interacting with each other.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Spirit - True spirit is referred to as only that which is 'Absolute' (see def). Any experience, duality (see def), distinction (see def), thing (see def), production (see def), materium, time, or creation (including 'spirits') understood from vantage of the temporal realm is not actually 'spiritual'.

Town - The 'town' is a reference to any place that there isn't integrated awareness of the Absolute-self and lower-self.

Trailers/RV - Used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as the body and soul. (see Airstream)

Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy, symbols (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Waffle House/Roadside Eateries or Grill - A place of sensory gluttony where small-self has little realization of the Absolute.

Will - A force and an awareness whose source is based in the ever-present, but may use the relative dualistic acts of in-ten-tion and at-ten-tion to manifest or conjure 'things' (see def) for the purpose of entertaining itself, and sometimes limiting or increasing its own and others perceptive field.

Journey's are driven within light's trance.

AIRSTREAMS PARKED BETWEEN THE RISING AND SETTING SUN

Early one morning we stepped from our trailers, convincing those nearby to go on a road trip. There was a promise of adventure, an illuminated experience...

We gave our word and the word was with us.

Driving Eastward, sun rays bent around our vehicles, creating shadows and textures that filled the eyes of those behind. When 'light' streamed through their windshields, it vibrated in energies perceived like a multi-banded Tequila Sunrise. In actuality, the horizon's radiance was simply the light of the world we were creating. It was here that those who were caravanning came to believe their RV's solid.

Perplexed, those further back in the convoy opened a CB channel, asking, "Uh, Rubberduck... what's light's substance... is it the source of promise and hope, the information provided by other Wills, or our sensation of prior consent?"

As long as the road's vibration filled each driver's body, it provided entertaining dreams and entrancing silhouettes.

Now the inside of our RV's were decorated with sol art - hanging smiley suns. Looking through the window we worshiped our small-selves when the sun rose and set. Having imagined distinction upon 'sun', duality's image was emboldened.

The essential nature, Tao and territory played host to roadside templates; conveniences mapping entranced highways and intersections. Whether trucking at 5 or 75mph, thought's 'sun' shined brightly. Wherever its illumination fell; there were metaphoric, esoteric, and hypnotic suggestions of 'soul' and 'separation'.

With souls consent... steering wheels appeared to have our hands driving a wheel of time, encouraging minds' vibration to be labeled 'light'. In the churches and schools we passed, sun worship displayed its many masks.

Soon, a vision of clarity sideswiped...
We had pulled to the side of the road.

Parked, we stepped outside where intellectualism and religion skinny dipped in the motel pool. As eavesdroppers, we heard normalized and occult sun worship egotistically suggest 'Absolute is relative' in purposeful badmouthing of that which mutually arises.

Within the Airstream of our sun-souls, the desire for indestructible RV's was driven by worship. This 'worth-ship' served to honor and venerate bigger rearview mirrors - all to solidify the 'soul', glorifying deeper, exciting thought-forms. Seeing we served creation and forgot its source - ourselves, we realized how hard we worked to diligently decorate trance. So much so, when we saw its reflection we'd proclaim...

'What a beautiful creation! My god, would you look at that sunset!'

Gazing back at our Airstreams exterior; thought reflected the self-facing mirrors of sun and soul, while the entranced concept of soul resided in its reflective distinctions. There in the trailer park of dreams, the desirous higher-will conjured Airstreams, bodies, planets, moons, suns, and stars through the agreement our caffeinated egos pronounced as light.

As the soul consented and enjoyed the trance (having forgotten to step outside the trailer), we engaged in the U-turn of soul worship (sun worship). That's why entranced drivers swore they were 'en-light-ened'. Indeed... they were! The use of roadway words 'soul and sun' was their signpost. These distinctions marked intellect and knowledge, which mistook the reflection of reality for essential reality.

For certain travelers the road never ended. Not even an infinite stack of maps could reach the intelligence of knowing. Wondering 'why?'... they eternally wandered from convenience store to gas station, as newly purchased maps were never enough.

Standing with one foot in the Airstream and one foot out, it was clear our trailers needed a rig to pull them, like birth needed death. Disconnected from the ball and hitch, our temporal soul became clear.

Parable Hotwire

Airstream/Trailers/RV/Recreational Vehicle - A metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Birth and Death - The temporal, dualistic observations of that which appears to 'come and go', are illusory-like transitions of form observed in the trance state, and reside within the relative perspective.

Eastward - indicates the choice to focus attention on some-thing.

Entranced/Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Essential Nature - The actual 'source', essence, identity that transcends all thought created abstractions regarding what 'you' are (see definition of the small-self 'you' spelled with a lowercase 'y'). It also can be considered the negation of all experiential based identifications (whereas 'you' are not what you do, what you look like, what you feel, what you 'think'). The essential nature stands alone as the actual You (see definition of the large-self 'You' spelled with an uppercase 'Y'). The essential nature incorporates the observer as a 'component', which feels in the present, but can be obscured by the process of observing, and may mistake the observed as something more than the creation of its and 'others' thoughts.

Disconnect - A metaphor that speaks to the removing some or all of the trance state within a dualistic experience to clearly see that what were once distinctions have been stripped down to their essential nature of being no more than conveniences for enhancing the experience of duality's playground.

Horizon - A destination that never arrives when you head towards it.

Light - The subjective sensation and interpretation an observer may make when information is delivered from other thought-forms (see def). This 'light' may be subjectively experienced as 'red, green, blue, yellow, orange, purple, indigo, and other frequency sensations the mutual wills have consciously or unconsciously agreed upon'. 'Light' is a sensation, the resulting feeling one gets when receiving the Will of another creator. We 'see' what we have consented to 'see' and what we are then 'tuned'. The 'small-self' hosted in the relative (see def) plays in the realm of light and dark, and all that mutually arises.

Maps - A 'fractal singularity' where all things are overlapped, including but not limited to any experience, concept, object, time, distinction, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process. Used as a term to form contrast for the metaphor 'Territory'.

Morning - A momentary spark of attention that is self-aware while not necessarily self-realized.

Perception - Defined as the process of observing that occurs only within dualistic, relative playgrounds. Perception is created by filters and templates that guide the observer into belief systems of consent.

Radiance - Perception by other souls who have consented to acknowledge creations (distinctions) manifested and conjured by other Wills.

Road Trip - is the experience one has when playing in the dualistic trance-state playground of life and death.

Roadway/Road/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Rubberduck - An example of a CB handle, or nickname.

Silhouettes - The perception and experience of multiple souls creating upon each others desires, and conjuring new 'things' through what appears as creation and destruction through the entranced eyes.

Sol Art - Funky artsy castings of suns and sun rays that sometimes have faces.

Solid - An aspect of perception that indicates the density of perceptive agreements within the dualistic trance state.

Sun - The word 'sun' is considered to be a SMTS (subconscious multi-term suggestion), in that the subconscious of those who absorb its additional associations are implanted without their awareness (ie; sol, sun, son, soul). We understand the use of this SMTS is due to 'past' sun worship and current 'son' worship, although both are merely suggestions that appear from the first creations of thought. The sun, son, sol, and soul all set and rise again, which imply temporal (see; temporal def), transient, dualistic, thought constructed space/time-based beginning and end, birth and death, existence and non-existence.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Temporal - That which is related to the creations of the mind, thought, and the thought process. Temporal constructions are never considered 'spiritual'. All duality, all 'things', including vibration, energy, matter, images, angles, numbers, including 'souls' are considered temporal.

Tequila Sunrise - The first distinction which is sound ("God Spoke and there was Light"). The first thought is sound, sound vibrates, vibrations are energy that 'glows' to 'the process of observing', subjectively interpreted as light, light forms shapes, colors, angles, numbers, letter.

The word was with me - A quote that partly describes the process of 'creation' and subsequent perception. The image above features an Airstream which represents the transient soul and body. The tow vehicle symbolizes 'choice'. The waters of the flood are an allegory to the 'creative void' which our Absolute-self designs as playground.

Those parked nearby - represents souls who are desirous of experience.

Thought - From the absolute vantage, the first distinction is thought.

Thought-forms - Thoughts that congeal a particular system of belief which take on a 'life' and 'energy' of their own. Thought-forms may reside in different 'energetic' forms and intensities. Created both consciously and unconsciously, they can attach and modify other thought-forms.

Time - A symptom of thought and conjured distinctions, engendered from higher Wills, and co-created by the unquestioned premise of complicit observers.

Window/Windshield - A metaphor of the field of perception that our own and others journey's are perceived. The window is partially characterized by the 'brain' (process of observing) AND the temporal (see def) energy which the brain subjectively interprets into its own 'reality'.

Vibration - The illusory-like appearance of shape, length, trough, crest, within those 'things' (see def) we define as 'energy', and 'energy's waves within 'matter' (see def). Within these allegories, 'vibrations' are considered a symptom of the small-selves attention and perceived movement through the relative playground.

Actualized wills place sprinkles on their ‘donut creation canvas’. There’s playful deception in the construct of ‘dimensions’...

THE DONUT CREATION CANVAS

Hope you’re hungry... the Double D Donut Shop is open with its many delightful, delirious, and demented dimensions. Good Cops and Bad Priests agree, you just can’t leave the Double D Donut Shack. Salivating, we consent to tasty deception. Walking away from the twisted buttermilks of right and wrong is challenging where delicious trance is present.

Why?

Because desire has a scrumptious need for dimensions.

Now... 3d, 4d, or a million d’s are still D’s... and that’s a lot of donuts. Co-creators and their creations come in many forms... eclairs, creampuffs, and french crullers to name a few. Residing in duality, the more one's attached, the further we are from The Great Donut God.

Back at the dough mixer, all knowledge is spells... the recipe of trance. We understand Knowing has fragrance at no dimensions, smelled only outside the shop before opening time. At zero dimensions, the donut hole is all that remains. We forget the taste of overly deep fried dimensions because there's no-thing to remember. Removing the sugar and fruit from apple fritters ensures they won't be bought again. Only knowledge is recalled, for its palatability is always on display behind the glass.

Donuts, coffee, ham & cheese croissants... the decorated truth of one trance is different than another, while the Absolute gives permission to dream an infinite amount of delectable dimensional realities.

To enter an establishment we agree to the 'rules' of the managers' Will. When we attempt to change the recipe without consultation, we're booted from the kitchen, or stripped of our apron. As long as the clock is ticking, we consent to the business hours of the owner's dream.

In morning hours we live in pink boxes, symptoms of other creators, marginally self-aware, identifying as separate. Here, employee's 'souls' create upon other Wills' creations... stacking donut rings displayed as new treats. Placing sprinkles, we build upon the creations of actualized Wills. Deep fried by 5am, only yummy fractal add-ons get placed on the larger menu.

As we bite into maple frosted goodness, we remember who creates and consents to dimensions. A dozen gobbled up, and the indigestion tempts us to think the donut created us. Where there's dimension, one's partially present... the exact place we want to experience great morning treats.

Parable Crumbs

Clock - The constructs and unexamined language and assumptions that imply that time is not created by thought. The 'wristwatch' is one of the most persistent illusory-like perceptions.

Co-creators - Two or more, ultimately illusory-like distinctive be-ings/entities that may believe their creations are their creators, and who come together to create a more complex movie-like reality (see; movie) for themselves and others by use of thought generated angles (see; angles).

Creations - A thought 'created' concept implying its own existence and the solidity of time when there is none. The word 'creation' incorrectly implies that the thought process created 'past' is real, and therefore, that there must have been a 'creator'. 'Creation' may also allude to thought, which is the first distinction.

Duality - A concept of mutually arising and complementary 'observations of processes'. Many of these concepts are littered with mistakes that arise from an incomplete recognition of the thought process that engenders their definition.

Dimensions - Di-men-s-ions are fun to play with while engaging in relative duality. This place of distinctions is where all dimensions are but imagined into existence and non-existence (see def). Yet, in the present there are no dimensions, for thought and its reflections aren't there to tease you into such contemplation.

Donut Creation Canvas - Refers to dualities field of potential 'things', which is essentially any experience, personality, concept, object, distinction, time, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Fryer - Refers to the process of making or refining things, so that they appear like 'new things'.

Menu - Any activity, behavior, or thing that competes for the attention of the observer. May refer to activities, things, habits, distractions, language with built in deception, and the commonly defined 5 senses that can act as barriers to understanding and embracing the essential nature.

Pink Boxes - Although the conventional box color where donuts are packaged, here it is used as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Sprinkles - Manifestations of our desire to create new 'things' (where things are defined as any experience, personality, concept, object, distinction, time, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

The Great Donut God - Refers to the Tao, flow, groove, essential nature.

The Owners Dream - Any superimposed Will whose creation is used as a canvass for other Wills to play upon.

Will - A force and an awareness whose source is based in the ever-present, but may use the relative dualistic acts of in-ten-tion and at-ten-tion to manifest or conjure 'things' (see def) for the purpose of entertaining itself, and sometimes limiting or increasing its own and others perceptive field.

Navigating the orange cones of fate and freewill

STUCK IN THE MUD

When we step outside our Airstream-souls, we see how fate and freewill are related.

Life's journeys are driven by our hands, unattached to birth and death. For time means no-thing 'before' then. Thought and time are facing mirrors, dualistic roadside concessions.

Fate and freewill describe a single state, depending on whether we're the driver or passenger. When the observer opens their window to get a clearer view, the imagined distinction between in and out, observer and observed, Airstream and road, begin to fade. In this, we might experience a nearby raven ('you', the lower-self) burst into a Phoenix ('You', the Absolute-self).

Recognition doesn't pull the floor mat from the distinction of Will. But thinking so leads some to view fate as a soft shoulder they never could pull their trailer from. Fate is freewill perceived as an infinite amount of nows... awareness bent through the exaggerated reflection of convex stick-on mirrors. This confuses those attached to the lens of time, a distraction of time & mileage warranted by the highly polished universal ego.

Let's step outside the RV and look around!

If the Airstream can symbolize the energetic body-soul, then in peace and presence we see other RV's as rentals. From the roadside, the interior appears empty. Of course... it is, from dualistic eyes. Our presence knows that 'no-thing' has ever been there, yet 'never not' been there as well.

Do we wonder who that Airstream belonged? Well, it was ours, in the illusory-like past and future, and the ever-present. A fading distinction between here and there, past and future, leads to unlearning the grinding gears of fate and freewill.

The door's open, where thought is seen comfortably living in time. We choose our focus; upon thought, Will, others desires, and the universe's egregore. Still, all these 'things and thoughts' are not the Absolute-self, but the dust created through playground romplings, travels, and adventure.

Review the metaphors... it's fated ;)

Absolute - The 'Absolute' is placed in the context of 'absolute and its subordinate relative'. This does not imply a dualistic relationship, as the 'Absolute and relative' are not mutually arising. The vantage of the absolute transcends all suspension of disbelief when aware of the temporal concept of 'mutual arising'.

Airstream/RV/Recreational Vehicle/Vehicle/Trailers - Although an Airstream is an aluminum travel trailer, it is used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Playground - The term used to describe the optimal experience of duality. This Playground is the 'place' and 'vantage' of having a mastery over the relative dualistic world, and walking in the peace of the 'Absolute'.

Smaller-self - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego.

Window/Windshield - A metaphor of the field of perception that our own and others journey's are perceived. The window is partially characterized by the 'brain' (process of observing) AND the temporal energy which the brain subjectively interprets into its own 'reality'.

Are we at war with ourselves?

THE EATERY'S DEEP FRIED BELIEFS

Remember the Waffle House bathroom, fumbling for the switch, where light appeared to be at war with darkness?

After finding our way, we watched the West and East Texans refusing to sit at joined tables, looking at each other's breakfast and refusing to order the same.

When the coffee was brewed, many were at war with themselves.

We gazed, to see boots mired in the overflowing restroom waters of existence and non-existence, is and is not. Customers shoveled six sausage, four bacon, five ego-egg and hash brown breakfasts down their gullet. Eyes locked with the breakfast beers fizz and ignoring the space between each bubble, it was easier to obsess about patty vs. hamburger, driver vs. Airstream, God in sky vs. God in reflection.

Gorging on fast food belief systems, intoxicated by beer chasers, some 'things' that appeared to mutually arise turned out to be false choices. Food smeared menus obscured the reality that absolute and relative weren't paired, making certain choices barely visible. Even the Yin Yang Asian Toast (plated as inverse drops) was being served day and night!

For many years we sat confused, until noticing the disclaimer at the bottom of the menu;

'Mutually arising meals are not served within the Absolute, but as delectable trance. Choice occurs in duality, and duality supports choice. The Absolute from hungry eyes, is the breakfast plate. Please enjoy.'

Slide behind the deep fryer

Absolute - The 'Absolute' is placed in the context of 'absolute and its subordinate relative'. This does not imply a dualistic relationship, as the 'Absolute and relative' are not mutually arising (see def). The vantage of the absolute transcends all suspension of disbelief when aware of the temporal (see def) concept of 'mutual arising'.

Bathroom - A closed-in area that limits the awareness that our real essence is the 'creator' and interpreter of other Wills 'creations', rather than the creation of the creators. This does not infer we believe our temporal 'selves' are not the creation of a more complex Will.

Beer bubbles - Used as a metaphor for thought.

East and West Texans - A phrase alluding to Eastern and Western perceptive assumptions.

Fast food belief systems - Belief systems that are no longer useful for the optimal experience of duality.

Light switch - A comparison that alludes to that which leads to ultimately false dichotomies.

Menu - Any activity, behavior, or thing that competes for the attention of the observer. May refer to activities, things, habits, distractions, language with built in deception, and the commonly defined 5 senses that can act as barriers to understanding and embracing the essential nature.

Mutually arise - An Eastern concept of mutually arising and complementary 'observations of processes'. Many of these concepts are littered with mistakes that arise from an incomplete recognition of the thought process that engenders their definition.

Things - Any experience, personality, concept, object, distinction, time, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception. The trance state occurs 'every-where'; with the exception of no-mind, no-thought, and the present.

Relative - A term used as a literary device to indicate all 'things' that are found in duality, including viewpoints that suggest yin/yang mutually arising concepts where it's inappropriate to do so.

Waffle House - A place of sensory gluttony where small-self has little realization of the Absolute.

Wash perceptive windows to see acts of choice and the nature of time.

DUSTY WINDSHIELDS

We were squinting as the sun glared ahead!

It's hard as hell to see the road through filthy windshields. So thinking ourselves artsy and clever, we installed stained glass as its replacement. Then, motoring in our somewhat sacred Airstream, time's temporal landscape rushed by. Looking down, The National Parks System of Reality suggested mapped perception to be the Good Book for judging past and future. In the pew of overdrive, we genuflected.

Through our travels we began to notice packed tourist buses lining the cliff. Traveling parishioners peered through tinted windows, the experience apparently filtered by consent. Many seemed to spectate through the same body and eyes, but still believed themselves alone. Looking away from the fact that their coming and going personality was not themselves, many sightseers thumbed the rosary beads of entranced time, as if attempting to overcome identification with body and soul. This was rarely successful in redecorating their travels, for the observing tourist had to first see themselves as timeless to change the trip's itinerary. In the end, the buses always showed up at the next planned stop.

We marveled, and for a fleeting moment felt the strange sensation that they just might be us! And in this, we recognized our hearts seeking novelty and surprise... but being attached to shape, the structure of our thought created universe remained the same.

So impulsively we decided to pull from the pavement. Dust and dirt filled the air!

The choice took but a moment, yet the fractal iconography immediately reframed. Outside the Airstream with feet on ground, the 'Miles to the Next Rest Stop' sign was blank. Looking around, it became obvious that whether we were trucking on I-5 or 95... the dream-stream's journey was a single criss-crossing trip.

Walking from the Church of StatusQuo Communion we awoke from time's attachment, away from the unquestioned scientific, intellectual, and religious scripture that kept us ignore-ant of driving in a game. Thought's steeple became glass, and Airstream eucharists a temporary distinction. Standing outside the RV looking in, we compared the guide on the seat to the essential awareness just out the window. Soon, the house of worship became transparent when we, the observer, had merely opened the windows.

It took bus loads of self-deception to believe our prior disinterest in driving between thoughts wasn't a symptom of choice. Respecting this realization, we no longer needed to convince ourselves, nor others of their epic destination - for nothing that can be, can never be.

Now as we drive with open windows, we see within the bell tower, where time remains an agreed to intersection created by 'other' Wills. In the nave, the soul is a place of filters, the process of observing. Having earlier consented to being baptized in time's tick-ticking, we dry off to know what perception is, and how it's created.

Within the RV church, asleep and dreaming, our souls create worlds that 'exist' for as long as we slumber. The congregations of these landscapes have self-awareness for the period that we are gods... ones with outstretched fingers who live in shiny aluminum trailers. Yet knowing the game, we inhabit the present in perfect knowing that our higher awareness shines when God is us, not vice-versa.

We look up at our creator with church bells ringing, desiring to be just like. Here, within the finest roadway domicile, our 'dreams' create eddies that dream as well. They dream in all directions, creating infinite reflections of Airstreams within Airstreams. Our small-selves are sigils begetting sigils; fractal-like dreams praying and floating in time at the behest of their co-creator who's ensconced in time as well.

From the roadside viewpoint the liturgy fades, where all the angels, humans, and demons live and die, with pleasure and pain... at least until we awaken, asking,

“Just when does our creator wake up, and we cease to dream? And what happens when our creator careens off the side of the road?”

Parked at the truck stop and sitting on the ice chest, we laugh and ponder, ‘Where we driving next?’

Yep, honoring choice, we calmly shift while the radio sings...

“On the side of the road sat a steeple of time a church of the vacant, the deluded and I
let us pray, let us pray, let us...
Hopeless and helpless we never were taught our Airstreams are visions sitting on blocks
The lord mechanic will help us - be not distraught
let us pray, let us pray, let us...
After the break down, beckon the overall’d man,
‘Unhook our suspenders with your oily hands’
We bow our head, to pull us from sand
let us pray, let us pray, let us...
Launch off the road, into ditch washed away those with their crutches they do pray they do pray, they do pray, they see...
Reflections in bathrooms of Airstreams and trailers now floating about... as Captain or sailors.”

To sing along with this fable, check out the lyrics...

Airstreams - Although an Airstream is an aluminum travel trailer, it is used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Asleep and Dreaming (Dream) - The temporal, dualistic observations of that which appears to 'come and go', which are transitions of form observed in the trance state, and reside within the relative perspective.

Attention - At-ten-tion is a word that holds the construct, spell, and suggestion of '10'. The word indicates the direction of an individual fractionalized soul's focus, as well as a will's ability to provide, send, and place information and desire within another soul, who then consciously or unconsciously chooses to allow that information to IN FORM within them.

Bathrooms - A closed-in area that limits the awareness that our real essence is the 'creator' and interpreter of other Wills 'creations', rather than the creation of the creators. This does not infer we believe our temporal 'selves' are not the creation of a more complex Will.

Buses - Belief systems that impart a set of perceptive filters.

Captain, sailors - terms that describe possible labels we give ourselves while navigating the relative dualistic journey.

Church of the vacant - Those who subscribe to ANY belief system as if it is not a transient tool to play with upon our approval, including; religion, science, and intellectualism.

Creator - One or more, distinctive be-ings that use of thought-generated angles to create 'things' (forms, events, experiences).

Crutches - Refers to the semantic usage in language, as well as societal structures and institutions that we support so as to retain our perception and comfort in the status quo.

Entranced/Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Flood - A metaphor alluding to the Absolute and the essential nature.

Journey/Travels - represents instances of desire that have been collated into memory and experience in time and space. Journeys only happen in the 'soul-scape', where the playground of duality is in motion and trance.

Lord mechanic - is a term that alludes to the distinctions we make that reinforce our view, lock in aspects of our ego, and give our power away.

Map - a metaphor for what we perceive and experience after our expectations, programming, and unquestioned suggested assumptions are overlaid.

Miles to the Next Road Stop sign - symbolizes future anticipation within the temporal trance state.

National Parks System of Reality - a set of creations suggested to you in concert by higher-wills.

Overalls - An item of clothing that represents the aspects of the personality that are thought of as being the real you, but are nothing but symptoms of an experience.

Perception - Defined as the process of observing that occurs only within dualistic, relative playgrounds. Perception is created by filters and templates that guide the observer into belief systems of consent.

Reflections - All interpretations of senses, as well as thought-forms (see def) including scientific theories, social conventions, religious and political dogmas, that we incorrectly perceive and believe to exist outside our own and others thought creation.

Roadway/Road/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process. Represents a path traveled by many souls.

Sand - Inconvenient reminders that bring challenge to belief systems we have used to inflame our ego.

Sigils - A segregated awareness that is created through thought by another awareness. All sigils are conjured. (see servitor, egregore, Godform)

Sitting on Blocks - refers to the state of what is considered 'the body', when it is in inaction or in the state of deterioration.

Small-selves - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego. The 'small-self' perceives through the templates created by itself and other Wills. The small-self can be completely entranced or be partially emancipated in its view.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Steeple of Time - in a statement that refers to the consideration of 'time' as if it's a perception and reality beyond our own fractionalized soul's creation and consent.

Suspenders - A pair of latched belts that hold our clothing in place. In this case, the metaphor is referring to those belief systems that we utilize to retain our perceptive distinctions of body and soul.

Temporal Landscape - An image, a sensation, a thing, or experience that comes and goes but is sensed by souls who have consented to its solidity, regardless of its actual transience.

Thought - From the absolute vantage, the first distinction is thought.

Time - A symptom of thought and conjured distinctions, engendered from higher Wills, and co-created by the unquestioned premise of complicit observers.

Tourist - One who subscribes to one or more belief systems.

Viewpoint - a metaphor that connects the moment a 'tourist' gets out of a bus, and looks around their surroundings without the filters of their viewing windows (perceptions build from desire, thought, and prior consent). A moment in space & time that lends a slightly different perception than normally experienced.

Window/Windshield - A metaphor of the field of perception that our own and others journey's are perceived. The window is partially characterized by the 'brain' (process of observing) AND the temporal (see def) energy which the brain subjectively interprets into its own 'reality'. Window/Windshield are analogies for any thought, set of thoughts, or beliefs that 'color or discolor' the perception of other 'things' and 'experiences' that higher wills have created.

Wipers - A metaphor for anything removing or minimizing perceptive filters, including belief systems and trance states.

Nothing is Ever Explained, Only Labeled

CONTRADICTION IS THE MAKE OF EVERY RV

Like a sticker stuck on a bottle of cheap Boones Farm Wine, nothing's ever explained, only labeled.

Know what else?

Most Rte 66 travelers don't know who or what they are, or even where they're going.

We see them leaning out the window, hollering, "If you can do anything, you can overload an Airstream so it can't be pulled by any truck."

Then, lost in their map they argue, "If there's an Airstream you can't pull, there's something you can't do."

That's right, the tourists are blind; idling in the middle of the road, unaware their growing reflection comes from the chrome of an approaching Peterbilt truck!

In the passenger's seat, philosophy is a cartographer. Sitting, we place labels that 'explain'. Then we drive in circles in hope some-thing 'outside' will appear to be unrelated to our choice, creation, and consent. In the driver's seat, we know that explanation remains belief based... driving us back to the truck-stop we'd just left.

Still, we choose to purposely navigate close to the road hazards of explanation, as this type of sightseeing opens up contradictions and gets us between thoughts. Unbuckled, the egoic seatbelt no longer suggests a destination.

Pulling over, roadside unlearning frees us from the road-trance.

The Metaphors;

Airstream/Trailer/Aluminum Hull - Although an Airstream is an aluminum travel trailer, it is used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as the body and soul.

Explanation - refers to actions used by a swollen ego to establish a deeper intellectual trance state. In this case, through double-downing on the thought-process to solidify the reflections it creates.

Peterbilt - This brand of semi truck represents the unstoppable flow of tao, the Absolute, the essential nature.

Omnipotent Paradox - Here, the parable illustrates that the 'omnipotent paradox' represents more than just contradiction. It is the symptom of thought watching its own reflection, and being attached to the notion that it can provide a knowing that resides outside of the temporary distinctions of its own thought process.

Traveler - is the term for a soul.

Tourist - refers to one who subscribes to one or more belief systems.

“We step outside the trailer and a hot wind blows.”

MY NEIGHBOR'S PITBULL HAS A BIG EGO, BUT MINE IS MEANER!

Wait a second!

What in tarnation is that? And what's that bowl doing there? To whom does it belong?

Oh no... it's our dog!

We never thought it necessary to name him, but should have... as dogs can be called out. Instead, we fed our feisty pup until it grew into a full sized snarler.

Now if our dog spills the trashcan - we usually just pop a cold one. But when the cat's missing its hind legs, or the kids are screaming and stuck on the truck's hood, that's when we brandish the baseball bat to teach the dog who's king of the camp, right?

Here in the campsite, the ego commonly growls at others. Some say its very nature is to bite and tear. When it tries to avoid conflict, it's drawn back to fight. Egos disguise themselves as soul. They're hackled fibbers, doing what they must to retain their illusory tall-tails. Their bark spins the tale of spiritual warfare, all to hide the truth they were born in a mirrored doghouse. While pretending to cast the original reflection, we've unlearned the dastardly ego trick of equating soul to spirit.

Among the dilapidated RV's, growling dogs fight by the dumpster. Howling in frustration that 'the spiritual' can't be described by barks and whimpers, the kennel of such utterances is self-limiting. It's the whining canine brain that digs a hole to hide that bone.

Only the spirit is free of chain. It's never gotten its ear torn off. Leaping from the dirt it becomes as if it never was, still enjoying the sensation of its prize dogfight memories. Heck... the soul is as spiritual as Mexican Hairless's are Pitbulls. Knowing this, we master our snarl and cure our mange.

Barriers between souls create leash tension, and ornery egos are the result of not digging under the fence. Yipping pain and wagtail pleasure always scratches itself. Still, we can run free in our awareness that inflamed ego is the cause of suffering. Pain... well it comes and goes.

From Camp Absolute's vantage, there's no right and wrong ego. Only in Camp Relative is ego-imbalance cured. Here, unmuzzled bravado no longer has us rooting around duality's dumpster.

As souls slip under the chainlink into their Absolute-self, they know they're in a campground, one chosen, and one of service... regardless of what other compartmentalized souls snarl.

So how are we to get our ego-dog to behave?

Well, for the small-self snarky poodle or mildly arrogant schnauzer, we gently have them walk behind our Absolute-self, as we're the dominant alpha. However, if our pet's vicious, we wait for a hot spell, remove the umbrella, and turn off the water. We encouraged it because it provided a sense of safety and certainty. So now, we ego whisper... taking that four legged creature for a stress inducing, push-the-limit gauntlet. We know there's going to be yelping, perhaps a one-way journey to euthanasia, although we aren't seeking to put ourselves down.

Starting with a ten minute basking in the kiddie pool, we ground with water and earth. Here, we greatly reduce the opportunity for our dog to lure us to the 'neighbors' area... which would lead us to tangle with their pets. After all, fighting dogs like blood. Once they taste it, they want more.

Then, we place our paws at the edge of oblivion, placing our small-selves at risk. This, until the ego settles and the mind quiets. Whether traversing icy solitude, hiking treacherous mountains, or going on a 100 mile trot-about in the desert... we do so until we can no longer chase rabbits, nor they chase us.

At completion, we know our silent dog whistle must be consistently blown. Otherwise, 'he'll' once again be crashing through our window with bared teeth and foaming mouth.

Sniffing and scratching ourselves into awareness, we declare;

"I appreciate my dog more when I realize it's bred for my convenience.

I am the master of my ego... and my dog. My pitbull of an ego can relax, creating more possibility and presence.

I have named my ego, like I do a dog.

I am not my collar. I strip it away and imagine myself feral and confident.

I am not my personality. Sometimes I'm just sleepy under the trailer.

I am not my relationships, even if I'm friends with cats.

I am not my thoughts, especially when I'm staring at an unattended steak.

I am not my creations, although my pawprint cement impressions can be quite impressive.

I am not my emotions, though possums do piss me off.

I am not my desires. They come and go like a box of favorite biscuits.

I am not my achievements... not withstanding the coat of fur I've decorated our carpet with.

I am no better, nor worse than any other (with the exception of some Chihuahua's).

As an animal, I no longer have fear of becoming a throw rug. Only 'humans' fear abandoning the soul and body.

I respect my ego as a tool and playground chew toy.

My perception of fur and teeth is higher-self game.

The ever-present 'me' transcends barks and growls.

The ever-present 'me' is larger than anything with attachments, and can never be chained.

Ego's an enjoyable pet. Trained, I navigate its moods... that of the self and that of the selfless.

I am now ready to take another walk, if needed."

The doghouse's metaphoric bones;

Absolute - The 'Absolute' is placed in the context of 'absolute and its subordinate relative'. This does not imply a dualistic relationship, as the 'Absolute and relative' are not mutually arising (see def). The vantage of the absolute transcends all suspension of disbelief when aware of the temporal (see def) concept of 'mutual arising'.

Airstream/RV/Recreational Vehicle/Vehicle/Trailers - Although an Airstream is an aluminum travel trailer, it is used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Dog (Poodle<Schnauzer<Pitbull) - Represents the ego throughout the stages of 'Natural to Inflamed'.

Smaller-self - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego.

An Airstream comes upon crossing roads, where wind and dust blows. Our smaller-self is the Airstream.

SILHOUETTE CAMPERS

Stalled in the intersection, past incarnations take 3 days and nights to get towed. Immersed in the crossing, radios blare a sexual song, serenading the crossroads of creative bliss, shine and rumble. The X-ing of streets are moments of manifestation... the apparent creation of Wills.

Each intersection has a junction of traffic. Where streets join, souls create maps of union - only limited by the size of the fold-out we drive upon. The tangle of Avenues and Boulevards making love have no end. These Inter-Sex-I-On's are playgrounds with horizons; each becoming the sun-ward journey traveling deeper, everywhere and nowhere.

When traffic signals blink into insignificance, traffic doesn't significantly change. Still, under glaring green and red lights, trance forms the blurry motions of significance and insignificance. Idling, the soul teases itself, taking another turn to trigger the magic walk-sign... all for a chance at intersection. Stepping away from our 'vehicle's' body and soul, traffic lights are for entranced observers amusement. Here we consider, 'Could it be with no cars, the lights have neither significance nor insignificance?'

Honk honk!! Only in duality do on and off signals mutually arise.

Upon the green light we become the product of a mischievous great spirit, our experience the intercourse of original sensation. Where the intersection of two potentials gives birth to perception, the lurid little secret of creation is clear - we're the symptom of a naughty god.

Our scrawny selves, our souls, are the symptom of self-pleasuring... the act of self-stimulation, traffic snarls of sperm and egg, man and woman, sunburn and moonlight grunion. Our natural egos roll around the bed of duality's trailer park, sometimes getting quite inflamed. Until the red light, there are good and bad lovers, right and wrong romance, and black and white linoleum beneath naked squirming bodies. It's the nature of dually trucks, doublewide trailers, Dirk Diggler, and triple D driver's that makes this so.

On the road, the rising Eastern sun shifts Westward to become the son, with mother earth the traction for our wheels. During these journeys, we're road tripping; creating, accepting, and leaving oil and rubber upon others creations. We stop in the created intersection of four seasons, dancing in the playground where swing chains squeak, merry-go-rounds swirl, and drinking fountains bubble until its waters gush in a great deluge to lift our RV's. Airstreams afloat, we dream of being awake or asleep. Outside, a flood of possibility rages, while partially submerged stop signs beckon us to imagine our many soul journeys. In the floods' torrents and eddies, bobbing vehicles radiate and reflect other Will's desires... which is the information we call 'light'. It enters our eyes to in-form, providing the trance the higher-self asked for - as the god of creation has a galaxy sized libido.

Navigating seascapes instead of landscapes, the spurious mystery of life and death's traffic lights are barely visible beneath the waters. We envision rolling towards the RV park, knowing it's us who 'creates' and accepts all 'things'. Here we know where we are, drifting and detached upon the playgrounds of soul exploration. When our travels move toward the light, we've embarked on the Sundalini Rising Journey, embracing the pretend 'creator' role we came here to be. When we drive away from light and darkness, we find solace in our rest.

Finding the nearest Airstream dealer, we go inside the model of choice and close the door again.

Drive into the metaphors as you embark in the parable;

Airstream/Trailers/RV/Recreational Vehicle - A metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Blinked into insignificance - represents the perception that occurs in duality; every-thing that comes, also goes.

Cars/Vehicle - used as a metaphor for what the observer labels body, soul, and energetic body.

Creations - A thought 'created' concept implying its own existence and the solidity of time when there is none.

Crossing Roads - An analogy to the creations, or intersections of one soul with another, or groups of souls and their 'creations' with other groups of souls that have consented to a set of perceptions, beliefs, attachments, and emotions.

Deluge - A metaphor referring to raging unstoppable water that represents the Absolute (see def). That which has no mutually arising component or polarity.

Duality - A concept of mutually arising and complementary 'observations of processes'. Many of these concepts are littered with mistakes that arise from an incomplete recognition of the thought process that engenders their definition.

Dually trucks, doublewide trailers, Dirk Diggler and triple D's - The 'D' of Dually and Doublewide represent duality, the 'D' of Dirk Diggler symbolizes flesh, and the 'D' of Double D represents the 'D'imensions that suggest and build our experience.

Ego - Natural Ego is differentiated from Inflamed Ego, where the natural ego understands its role of being within duality, while the inflamed ego wishes to force duality to become the Absolute, ignoring that they do not mutually arise.

Entranced/Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Green and Red Lights - A metaphor for that which is mutually arising.

Intersection - In this analogy, the word 'intersection' is a derivation of the homonym (similar sound) 'inter s e x tion'. The 'X' is a cross turned 45 degrees. As one line 'crosses' the other, they form the union. 'One' soul joins with another, and through intersection produce new consciousness, experience, and souls.

Intersections - A metaphor for the 'process of creation', where crossed lines 'create' through their inter-sections (derive; 'sex').

Journey/Roadway/Road/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Life and Death - The temporal, dualistic observations of that which appears to 'come and go', are illusory-like transitions of form observed in the trance state, and reside within the relative perspective.

Light - The subjective sensation and interpretation an observer may make when information is delivered from other thought-forms (see def). This 'light' may be subjectively experienced as 'red, green, blue, yellow, orange, purple, indigo, and other frequency sensations the mutual wills have consciously or unconsciously agreed upon'. 'Light' is a sensation, the resulting feeling one gets when receiving the Will of another creator. We 'see' what we have consented to 'see' and what we are then 'tuned'.

Maps - A 'fractal singularity' where all things are overlapped, including but not limited to any experience, concept, object, time, distinction, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process. Used as a term to form contrast for the metaphor 'Territory'.

Merry-go-round - The merry-go-round represents the dizzying reflective nature of 'time'... that which always arises when creative distinctions are dreamt into tentative flight through Will and imagination.

Mutually Arise - An Eastern concept of mutually arising and complementary 'observations of processes'. Many of these concepts are littered with mistakes that arise from an incomplete recognition of the thought process that engenders their definition. Such examples are; Good-Bad, Good-Evil, Right-Wrong, Thing/No-Thing, Existence/Non-existence etc. Whenever linguistically associated to the Absolute, the concept of 'relative' is not mutually arising. Same as 'duality'.

RV park - Refers to a gathering of souls, with all the accouterments of basic experience, both pleasurable and displeasing.

Significance and Insignificance - Concepts that provide worth and value to a specific dualistic experience, but not necessarily a universally held ideal.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Sun - The word 'sun' is considered to be a SMTS (subconscious multi-term suggestion), in that the subconscious of those who absorb its additional associations are implanted without their awareness (ie; sol, sun, son, soul). We understand the use of this SMTS is due to 'past' sun worship and current 'son' worship, although both are merely suggestions that appear from the first creations of thought. The sun, son, sol, and soul all set and rise again, which imply temporal (see; temporal def), transient, dualistic, thought constructed space/time-based beginning and end, birth and death, existence and non-existence.

Sun and Son - The word 'sun' and 'son' is considered to be a SMTS (subconscious multi-term suggestion), in that the subconscious of those who absorb its additional associations are implanted without their awareness (ie; sol, sun, son, soul).

Sun and Son - The word 'sun' and 'son' are esoterically connected.

Sundalini Rising Journey - Together, the journey unmasks a simple mystery, one that walks you from esoteric to exoteric, a place to open your eyes and discover your pupils are of the 'sun'. As student-pupils, we allow in-form-ation from other Wills to form our light experience. Seeing eyes are windows of the 'soul', 'sol', 'sun', and the 'I'. Life and light are not what they appear... when you see, you'll likely have the boldest, joyful belly laugh you've had in a long time.

Swing - The 'swing' is used as a metaphor for the motion of our segregated memories, within the constructs of illusory-like lives and deaths.

The merry-go-round - represents the dizzying reflective nature of 'time'... that which always arises when creative distinctions are dreamt into tentative flight through Will and imagination.

The 'Paper you drawn on' - refers to the varied spells and manifestations one imprints on other souls within the trance state.

The 'sunward' journey - refers to our travels toward the source of 'light', where we may choose to place our attention, and the Sundalini Rising Journey.

Things - Any object, experience, form, that has a beginning and an end.

Thought-forms - Thoughts that congeal a particular system of belief which take on a 'life' and 'energy' of their own. Thought-forms may reside in different 'energetic' forms and intensities. Created both consciously and unconsciously, they can attach and modify other thought-forms.

Time - A symptom of thought and conjured distinctions, engendered from higher Wills, and co-created by the unquestioned premise of complicit observers.

Traffic - All interpretations of senses, as well as thought-forms (see def) including scientific theories, social conventions, religious and political dogmas, that we incorrectly perceive and believe to exist outside our own and others thought creation.

Traffic Flow - The reinforcing feedback that collective agreement within trance state provides to reaffirm its solidity as more than transient.

Turn Signals - represent our frame of reference for what we feel, see, hear, contemplate, and think.

'X' - a symbol and a sigil. Prior to any variant of language claiming the symbol 'as their own', the message built within 'x' is the visual intersection. Turned a few degrees it is also a 't' or cross. Here, the symbol denotes the creation and destruction of 'things'. Crosses 'create', whether they are on their side or not. It's a SMTS (subconscious multi-term suggestion), in that the subconscious of those who absorb its additional associations are implanted with thought forms without their awareness.

3 Days and Nights - The earth winter solstice Dec 22-25th constitutes approximately 3 days of 'death' before the sun begins to rise from its furthest equatorial tilt. The sun/son/soul then rises again. Both the 'intellectual' and the 'religious' definitions are thought forms (trance inducing hypnotic suggestions) that imply duality is singularity, that the relative is Absolute (see def), and that the temporal is the essential nature (see def).

Stepping on the gas to master rebirth incarnations

HOT ROD SOUL

Sporting our #11 racing jersey, we're feeling sexy as the hotrod peels out. Pedal metaled, the engine screams as we're thrown back into the fleshy leather seat.

((A swirl and blur, a passion of 3D adrenaline, speed and a rush of light and sound!))

We pass the finish line, remove our helmet, shake our hair and think, 'Dang... if anything's spiritual, this is it!'

Yet, leaning against the hood, a contemplation fills our soul, 'How's it that when shifting between 1st and 2nd I discover the soul, but think it's spirit? And when I shift to 3rd, I'm convinced 'all' is spirit. At 4th, how come I realize the blurred signs of things simply can't be spirit? Is the road rushing to a temporary end, a roundabout glaring with oncoming headlights of myself driving head on?'

Perhaps, our 'race car' is the incarnate soul-body riding on a pair of mag-wheels?

While 1st gear attention is in the vehicle, our small energetic-self fancies itself a Formula '1' driver. Marveling at mechanical pistons, imagined details appear. In convex mirrors the supercharged self suggests the perception of complexity.

During the sensation of 2nd gear, we're in the process of 'shifting'. This is perception moving forward, where the feeling, conditioning, and unquestioned language of being 'incarnate' is with us and behind us on the track. Here, consciousness is inversely proportional to the dashboard of ego attachment. The quieter we get, the more our trancedometer is revealed to be a reflection of dualistic attention.

Just what is the speed of our awareness?

Coaxing our transmission to 3rd, perception moves outwards, where 'other incarnate souls' live and die along the raceway. We notice front and rear bumpers; things that appear to have beginnings and ends, fronts and backs, patterns existing only in the rearview mirrors of our hotrods hurling.

At 4th, we rip the goggles from our face. Our clarity reveals the high octane distinctions we've accepted. Speeding past blurred signposts and seeking to beat our quarter mile time, we're playing in the tentatively real. Having become unlearned, labeled awareness fades. The wind in our hair is but an eddy in the stream. In speedway sensibility, if something is to be identified and explained, it's no longer in the realm of our present 'knowing', having become the racetrack reflection of 'knowledge'.

No matter how we burn rubber, at trips end the small-self encounters itself as 'light'. Enlightenment being the illumination from oncoming headlights, we find ourselves at racetrack center, knowing the intensity may blind us from what might be considered. There is nothing to gain in what we've been checker-flagged to believe. Stepping away from subject and object, we're conscious of the transitory race as fleeting yet worthwhile. In the driver's seat, being incarnate is a simple perceptive choice. Driving away from light and darkness we ask, 'How do we become one with the ultimate driver if we worship light, but don't know what it is?' Considering the actual trance state of light, soul, and sound; the egos cockpit has better visibility. Speeding toward its prior 'consented to' rays isn't always the correct decision.

When nitro-charged engines rumble, are the drag racing lights telling us when and where to go, and who and what we are? The soul goes to the light because the soul is light... a state and thing suggested to us by another driver, which is us as well. And so another thrilling trance is born, branded 'spiritual'.

Idling, we choose to consider the sensation as the novel drama of god, or the light of our own smaller-self. If we're triggered by the first consideration, desiring it to be the race light, then BAM! down the asphalt we go again, ignorant of our true nature for present incarnations, regardless of being in the illusory past or future.

What's our choice? Hang out in the pitstop, come back not knowing we're the driver, or return with the mastery of racing gloves and a racer's grin?

Wings and wheels, the producer and receiver of light... which gear are we in?

Tune-up your understanding;

#11 racing jersey - this metaphoric phrase refers to the number 11, eleven... and its esoteric implication of duality (what makes el, even? or l even?)

Consciousness - defined for this parable refers to the timeless awareness of a 'be-ing' (from a vantage that's present with the temporary distinctions of observer/process of observing/observed). Here the be-ing is in knowing that it's not separate, realizes it's essential Absolute nature, and has realized it's made a choice to play in the relative (also named duality). That said, when the natural ego (that which is symptom of playing in the playground) becomes 'attached', it then believes that it's own small-self creations, as well as the creations of Wills outside itself are greater than their original source of creation... the creator, enabler, and perceiver which is themselves. It's thinking that the distinctive thoughts and associated feelings the small-self experiences is more than just a transitory reflection. It is the 'attachment' to ego, not the ego itself that effects the ability to be present, aware, and conscious. The level of ego attachment is metaphorically 'inverse' in proportion to consciousness.

Drag racing lights - is a phrase that alludes to the initial trance state where there are beginnings and ends, births and deaths.

Finish line - refers to the perception and distinction of 'death'.

'Formula 1' - refers to the observer's ego state of awareness. It speaks to the segregated-self having little awareness of its condition.

Goggles/windows - A metaphor of the field of perception that your own and others race-like productions are cast upon.

Hotrod/race car/fleshy leather seat, vehicle - used here as a metaphor for the small-self, the physical and energetic 'body' sometimes identified as body and soul.

Light - The subjective sensation and interpretation an observer may make when information is delivered from other thought-forms (see def). This 'light' may be subjectively experienced as 'red, green, blue, yellow, orange, purple, indigo, and other frequency sensations the mutual wills have consciously or unconsciously agreed upon'. 'Light' is a sensation, the resulting feeling one gets when receiving the Will of another creator.

Mirrors - All interpretations of senses, as well as thought-forms (see def) including scientific theories, social conventions, religious and political dogmas, that we incorrectly perceive and believe to exist outside our own and others thought creation.

Nitro-charged engines - refers to the desire of the Absolute to create an experience for itself.

Observer - The essential nature incorporates the observer as a component (defined here using temporal words as best as possible), which feels in the present, but can be obscured by the process of observing, and may mistake 'the observed' as something more than the creation of its and 'others' thoughts (also see; process of observing and observed).

Oncoming headlights - is a metaphor that speak to the recognition of one's own 'small-self'.

Pitstop - a 'locale' where the soul makes a choice to either redissolve into the Absolute, or return to the field of duality (with or without prior sense and/or memory).

Road/track/raceway - refers to the journey of a life within duality.

Shifting gears - is a phrase indicative of the process of unlearning, reframe, and acknowledgement that one is in a playground of duality.

Signposts - refer to activities, things, habits, distractions, language with built in deception, and the commonly defined 5 senses that can act as barriers to understanding and embracing the essential nature.

Small-self - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego. The 'small-self' perceives through the templates created by itself and other Wills.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought .

Spirit and Spiritual - True spirit is referred to as only that which is 'Absolute' (see def). Any experience, duality (see def), distinction (see def), thing (see def), production (see def), materium, time, or creation (including 'spirits') understood from vantage of the temporal realm is not actually 'spiritual'.

'The mastery of racing gloves and a racers grin' - The completed state of unlearning where a small-self soul dives fully into duality, but with the knowing of its original essential nature.

Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Watch - The constructs and unexamined language and assumptions that imply that time is not created by thought. The 'wristwatch' is one of the most persistent illusory-like perceptions.

Remember that desert oasis, where all the blinking lights n' slot jinglings seemed so real?

AIRSTREAM WHISPERING

One day outside of Vegas, humanity stumbled outside to see their shining images reflected off an Airstreams exterior. We imagined ego-souls coming and going, like well used RV's.

In this shallower trance, we laughed and caught our breath, recalling how we 'used to look through the window, imagining the road rushing beneath'.

Our lives were intersections that created traffic, a scrolling marquee on the roadside; colors and shapes and hues of sunsets only those in other vehicles could see. Sounds of passing cars, the ruckus of truck stops, n' horns n' honks n' "Get the hell off the road - yer driving too slow" hollered from geezers and yuppies alike.

All of this heard from ears in this human aluminum hull.

Peering from symbolic 'Airstream soul bodies', our egos felt the need for mirrored distractions. We drove to locales of immense sensation; casino's of higher-self blinding...

and all to convince ourselves that gambling is chance and random, when there's nothing such.

Then, after an exceptionally long night, the sun rose on that sparkling town. We slowly stepped out one by one, to see...

There were drivers n' passengers and mechanics in soiled jumpsuits as far as the eye could see, and a boneyard of sometimes sweet, but often bitter stories of broken down RV's. We knew that all our adventures served the desire for travel. Flat tires, dents, and incredible views went together.

We tasted the moment in the pictures we drew, and the tricked-out mods we did to our trailers. We knew we'd do it again, even if it was to end up in the junkyard.

Standing, we tapped our etheric fingers... with little concern about sunsets outrunning our vehicle. Yeah, we thought about the time we ended up in the drainage canal with the door jammed against the berm, wondering if we'd ever get out. Finally, our souls simply climbed out of the top vent. Within duality, all 'realities' were levels of trance, of which the denial was the tell of those who said they 'had no ego'.

We laughed at ourselves, and even our annoying neighbors came by for a spirit-beer. 'What the hell were we doing?’ we asked, remembering the purposeful act of banging our ego-doors into one another.

Ego whispering had unleashed choice.

Every-thing we experienced was clear, especially the gluttonous forays into the all-you-can-eat buffets, and the ‘rocking don’t come a knocking’ that happened on our journey’s. We knew that without ego, there was no playground. We didn’t need ego-death for us to be in flow, as the act of ego-whispering kept one foot in and out of the RV.

The mirrors within our Airstream reflected levels of attentive choice. There were other recreational vehicles, with desire, consciousness, and thought. Yet even from ‘outside’, shiny RV’s still reflected our image. Meanwhile, the light of other Wills spilled from windows and headlights... in-forming us. Being aware, unwelcome suggestive impressions ceased to receive consent.

Where did we go next?

Through ego whispering we recognized what soul truly is, its parking spot within the dream. Clarifying ego’s function freed us to cavort within the playground. And although some of us manifested new, shiny aluminum bodies; there were others that kept lamenting, ‘What’s up with this life expression?’

Ignoring the vast murmurings of the multitudes, we declared;

"Any RV sales pitch that pushes the belief that 'body, soul, and energy are anything more than the small-self' is now crushed, plasma torched, melted down, hack shopped, and flatbed delivered to the scrap metal yard in a peaceful, warm hearted way. I now embrace Absolute-self, the driver, along with the lower-self in a balanced, reclining bucket seat posture. It is done."

And driving down the road we whispered;

"My perception of RV is not my sole Absolute-self. The ever-present 'me' transcends make, model, and soul chassis - which is not significantly better, nor worse than others. I am not the brand of RV I drive.

I am not my aftermarket add-ons, being relaxed in and outside the vehicle.

I am not my bumper sticker personality, but it's fun to play that game.

I am not my relationships, despite towing a great Honda Rancher ATV.

I am not my thoughts, don't ya think?

I am not my emotions, dammit!

I am not my creations, as I never had the time to be.

I am not my desires, that's the wind-speed outside the vehicle.

I am not my achievements, unless i've jumped the Grand Canyon in my Airstream."

To understand this parable, park here;

Airstream/RV/Vehicles/Aluminum Hull - is used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Ego - 'Ego' is transient (like a gust of wind). When attempting to capture it, it becomes clear it's not really any-thing... more of an attachment to a reflection.

Ego Whisperer - one who acknowledges the uses and limitations of the ego in navigating the playground labeled 'duality'.

Human/Humanity - Within the parables and allegories, the term 'humanity' refers to a perception that oneself, or those 'like you' are distinctly unique from other labels and creations of mind, thought, and belief that you have imagined and consented.

Intersections -The word 'intersection' is a derivation of the homonym (similar sound) 'intersection'. The 'X' is a cross turned 45 degrees. As one line 'crosses' the other, they form the union. 'One' soul joins with another soul, and through their intersection produce new consciousness, experience, and souls.

Journey - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Jumpsuits and tank tops - An item of clothing that represents the aspects of the personality that are thought of as being the real you, but are nothing but symptoms of an experience.

Las Vegas/Vegas - Represents any activity, behavior, or thing that competes for the attention of the observer. May refer to activities, things, habits, distractions, language with built in deception, and the commonly defined 5 senses that can act as barriers to understanding and embracing the essential nature.

Playground - The term used to describe the optimal experience of duality. This Playgroundia is the 'place' and 'vantage' of having a mastery over the relative dualistic world, and walking in the peace of the 'Absolute' (see def).

Projector Light - Creations from other Wills that a soul has consented to experiencing.

Rushing Road Beneath - A phrase that alludes to the process of observing internalizing events that have prior consent, as if 'outside' their purview. The speed of consciousness, where awareness identifies more 'things', and self-realization represents the blending of 'things' into oneness.

Slot Machines, Gambling, Random - Trance states that provide the observer a sense of disconnection from the power of their own attention.

Small-self - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego. The 'small-self' perceives through the templates created by itself and other Wills. The small-self can be completely entranced or be partially emancipated in its view. When it is emancipated, any attachment to that which is perceived is lessened, whereby in its be-ing then acts in the knowing it chose its experience.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought.

Theater - A loose metaphor comparing the 'creations' of those who use the thought process to a film that is produced and viewed by itself and 'others'.

Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Window - A metaphor of the field of perception that your own and others journey's are perceived.

Downshift to take your power back from words implying 'time'.

A SIMPLE REPAIR

While in the repair shop, I found myself whining 'Why me? Why's this happening?'

Between the zip of the pneumatic screwdriver, 'why' blew its cover; for the question flicked the tongue of time, bouncing between reflective trailers, ignoring its root – the imagination. 'Why' had inserted cause & effect between its rusty premise.

I wandered across the street to the AstroBowl, where a crowd was ogling over a badass RV. As entranced roadside souls, they parked close, giving and receiving compliments to make their experience seem more real. I wondered 'when' the yakking would stop, and 'how' they could gloat so long.

Clearly, 'why' had friends.

And what was taking my repair so long!

Time was apparently in the baby seat behind me... the screaming toddler of duality.

'Whaaaa! Hear me! Whaaaa!'

It wanted the pacifier of my attention.

Glancing from my wristwatch, the shop-signs sneakily reinforced duality. Realizing I'd given power away, time was no longer more real than its creator.

Even on the boulevard, language suggested the past and future to be more solid than its consenter. Asking 'what brought me here' solidified the suggestion... time.

Yeah, it was time for a beer...

Pull over before you read the definitions;

Airstream/Trailers/RV - A metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Entranced/Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Duality - A concept of mutually arising and complementary 'observations of processes'. Many of these concepts are littered with mistakes that arise from an incomplete recognition of the thought process that engenders their definition.

Journey/Roadway/Road/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Question Words; Why, what, where, how, when - A set of question words that each hold internal assumptions, including the implication that 'time' is the baseline to judge all things from.

Time - A symptom of thought and conjured distinctions, engendered from higher Wills, and co-created by the unquestioned premise of complicit observers.

Shop Signs - Refer to activities, things, habits, distractions, language with built in deception, and the commonly defined 5 senses that can act as barriers to understanding and embracing the essential nature.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Wristwatch - The constructs and unexamined language and assumptions that imply that time is not created by thought. The 'wristwatch' is one of the most persistent illusory-like perceptions.

Stepping into the Airstream, our imaginations go wild... or do they?

DREAMING OF MORE 'PERMANENT' JOURNEYS?

Inside, thought has a tattoo of a clock. The reflected light, microwave popcorn, gravity of falling on our ass, and every trinket is an entranced and entertaining journey.

Here in our RV, we consider the origination of experience, examining sublime reality, taking in both thrill and chill. Our embodied form floats upon the flood, dreaming of new and more 'permanent' movies, playgrounds, landscapes, and carnivals to play.

Differing levels of awareness represent the vehicle's brand, while perception of 'body' occurs on the road. The temporary experience rests upon the axles of consent, with rear-view mirrors placing attention upon the co-created fractal.

Yet, in the showroom mirror, the 'human chassis' is a tricked out Globetrotter® Airstream admiring its ultra-modern curves and pair o' dice dangling. Perception has its mischievous boundaries, so we roll the dice to discover paradise. Hand sliding across the aluminum hull, we feel a beginning and end. Yet touch lusts for more. Awareness within 'embodied' forms is an epic trickster! That's why looking through open windows, we adjust perception's limitation to reveal the road as the playground we drive.

Sitting in the driver's seat - which is the source of awareness, consciousness isn't what it seems. Even at the RV sales lot, 'wisdom' is the leisure suit telling us how to make the experience more agreeable. There's no right or wrong in getting leather seats, and going plush makes for a smoother drive. Regardless, growth has a curious tendency to occur through discomfort faster than its laid back cousin comfort... not that we need a nasty spring stabbing into our back the whole time.

This recognition is disagreeable to most drivers, including grannies and speed racers. We find compelling quotes and deep feeling images to help us forget the realization, as symbols and knowledge are almost always paths of having better dualistic soul experience - not ways to know our real spirit. Still, it's all good, as there's no deadline for awareness or self-realization. So when we're ready to delete a belief system (like, all Fleetwoods suck), or reframe cherished attachments we feel 'spiritual' by no longer cleverly labeling them 'faith', we've arrived in the presence of choice. Replacing feel-good wisdom with unlearning and its discomfort isn't for everyone!

Our smaller-self is the driver... one who questions 'The best moment to step outside the vehicle', and determines it to be 'Whenever the Absolute-self chooses'.

How do we know when this time is?

Well, whenever we do it!

The path to oneness may appear quite different than expected.

There's no rush, no hurry for our awareness to be saved, no need to become that change-maker. Relaxed... time means no-thing. Our idle is constant in the knowing that smaller-self pulled by higher-state creates more things, times, experiences, memories, and change when it's damn well ready!

Yet, we never know if there's a tourist ready to drive from the parkland, or a bloodshot traveler eager to step from their trailer. That explorer may look like someone else, but it's us... wearing different overalls. When diesel's illicitly siphoned from our tank, it's the price for radiating actuality into others RVs, and the consequence of knowing we're in a playground. Having bumper stickers pronouncing our truths doesn't brighten our journey. So, we peel them off.

Let's head to the carwash now...

Oh... the things we do to polish our Airstreams!

Roll into the metaphors and terms;

Absolute - The 'Absolute' is placed in the context of 'absolute and its subordinate relative'. This does not imply a dualistic relationship, as the 'Absolute and relative' are not mutually arising (see def). The vantage of the absolute transcends all suspension of disbelief when aware of the temporal (see def) concept of 'mutual arising'.

Actuality - Refers to the state of an observer whose perception is balanced by a knowing of the Absolute, or Tao Flow.

Airstream/Trailers/RV/Recreational Vehicle - A metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Clock - The constructs and unexamined language and assumptions that imply that time is not created by thought. The 'wristwatch' is one of the most persistent illusory-like perceptions.

Driver - A term that alludes to the 'Soul', defined here as the temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain'). See 'Soul' for more description.

Flood - A metaphor alluding to the Absolute (see def) and the essential nature (see def). Also referred to by 'Torrent'. All of these descriptions do not mutually arise, nor do they have polar equivalents. This metaphor is used as a metaphor for the Tao, the Flow, and Groove.

Gas siphoned from truck - A metaphorical phrase which represents energy pulled from you by those souls who have made the choice to become deeply involved in duality, and embedded in the trance state.

Human Chassis - A metaphor that envisions the 'human body' as a vehicle.

Journey/Roadway/Road/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Globetrotter - A high-end Airstream model known for its modern, sleek look.

No-thing - A term that signifies the word is actually a compound statement. In this case, 'nothing' originally refers to 'no thing' - where a 'thing' is defined as any experience, personality, concept, object, distinction, time, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Overalls - An item of clothing that represents the aspects of the personality that are thought of as being the real you, but are nothing but symptoms of an experience.

Pair of Dice - A play on the word 'Paradise', inferring the perception of which can discover if it continues to look. There's a finite amount of dice rolls that can happen. Eventually, you find what you're looking for.

Parkland - Represents the creation of yours and other Wills, including those perceived as Earth and Sun. It also infers a level of 'consent to perceive' from those souls that are experiencing it.

Playground - The term used to describe the optimal experience of duality. This is the 'place' and 'vantage' of having a mastery over the relative dualistic world, and walking in the peace of the 'Absolute'.

Rearview mirrors - All interpretations of senses, as well as thought-forms (see def) including scientific theories, social conventions, religious and political dogmas, that we incorrectly perceive and believe to exist outside our own and others thought creation.

Showroom Mirror - A phrase that alludes to the experiences we have as being reflections of our consent, creation, and co-creation.

Smaller-self - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego.

Tourist - refers to one who subscribes to one or more belief systems.

Trance/entranced - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception. The trance state occurs 'every-where'; with the exception of no-mind, no-thought, and the present.

Traveler - A term for a soul.

Windows - A metaphor of the field of perception that your own and others journey's are perceived. The window is partially characterized by the 'brain' (process of observing) AND the temporal energy which the brain subjectively interprets into its own 'reality'. Same as 'windshield'.

In the Diner, Sleep and Wake are but several menu items

DINER OF DREAMS

Partying, we stop at the eatery for vittles. Concluding the midnight munchery, we stroll the lot. Yet before speeding away, you smirk and holler, "See ya in dreams!"

At home, pillows cushion your head, as your body melts into the mattress. Drifting... the smell of bacon and the clinking of dishes fills your dream-screen. You're sitting in the diner, where dreaming and awake are presented in the same way ketchup and mustard appear as sole condiments. Adjacent, confused customers stare at the table. They know something's amiss. "What's reality and what's dream?" they ask, unaware the question is soaked in a greasy premise.

Traveling from dream to dream, diner to diner, somebody's sitting next to you...

Wondering who's there, you question if you're sleeping.

A voice interjects, "There are many roadside diners, each with neon trances that flicker suggestions upon your bed."

Now you know you're dreaming!

The voice carries on, "Recall that decades of road stops left us with little awareness of anything outside the eatery. In our delirium, the world was a place of tasty ego, a smorgasbord for deep-fried souls, arrogant hungry intelligences embracing rebellion. Do you recall the many swirling Wills attempting to convince us that 'sleep' could only be a place of freedom, as if different than its mirror called wake? In the booth, sleep's menu emphasized roadway infinity as real, and eternity as if ordered sunny side up. Remember? Even the early bird specials advertised their trance as if residing outside duality."

Upon the bed you lay, trying to awaken as you ponder... 'Is this sleep paralysis?'

Yet the voice continues, "In sleep there are angry biker familiars and impatient trucker seraphim, like the ones of restaurant folklore where Chef Jacob wrestled the angel in the serving area. To win, we simply persist throughout the night. Other times, we spend eons within the establishment. Yes! You're beginning to recollect... after such resistance, nasty mannered eatery spirits lose the urge to tangle - for they're bound to time's menu as well. As symptoms of choice swirling in a roundabout, they think themselves driving upstream.

Kicking back at the counter, we always continue. Suffering's no longer on the menu, though indigestion comes and goes. We now reside in and out of duality, a boot in and out of the diner. This is how we balance imbalance. Chow'n down Tao, we bear the kitchen's heat as present souls knowing who and what we are.

Walking back and forth from the diner we sleep in our RV's. Dreaming, we know we're the specter of each other's eyes. Wake and sleep being trances of consent, the window's reflection reveals the real ghost. In our awareness, Airstream spirits consciously choose the road, glamping sites, and eateries. Inside, we no longer think we've gone someplace else, remembering it's but another yummy ego-experience. Even still, we're aware that headlights occasionally flash through the Waffle House to demand our other selves continue sitting.

Outside the Waffle House the dream isn't a common dream, but 'dream-like'. No longer road-hypnotized with white line fever, the word describes one level of the unreal. From our truck, life is not an illusion, but 'illusory-like'. In our travels, breakdowns are not a dream, but 'dream-like'. Radio lyrics from the deeply entranced rarely sing the recognition, as it would tune-in to the sublime attachment of movie-like travels. Ignoring exclamations of syrupy egos screaming, "futility", our comings and goings are vivid eddies in rivers of melted butter. Sadness, burnt toast, grief, runny eggs, and fear cannot exist here... not for long. Reliant on no-thing, no-experience, no-memory, no desire - our overflowing menu of presence is sovereign."

In what seemed a moment, sleepy eyes follow the course of the moving sun. The rising orb splashes light upon your face as you enter a new dream-like trance called 'wake', where 'light rays' are distinctive moments and a result of Will.

Awake, you check the doors. They're locked. Turning the handle you step outside where streams of choice flow like heat, light, sound, and the smell of fresh coffee. Outside the body-vehicle journey, peering from the eateries window into the Absolute, you no longer pour more syrup upon the ego-dream than can be digested. All experiences, including relationships, loves, affinities, things, memories, lives... and even the Waffle House itself are soul distinctions reflected into infinite complexities with no end.

We know our Absolute-self creates a savory game, one with exceptional breakfast offerings. Sleep and wake reside in duality, consented to and created by our essential nature which laughs near itself - fork and knife in hand.

Fable Metaphors:

Bed - Inside the metaphorical 'Airstream of our being', the bed represents dream and sleep. Outside, there appears to be a flood; terrifying to the eyes, but floating in peace once we've opened the windows.

Biker Familiars - refers to supernatural entities that appear as 'Bikers', not ghosts or any being without conventional 3 dimensional form distinctions.

Diner/Roadstop/Eatery - metaphors referring to the commonly perceived 'world' that the mind may perceive as solid, real, and permanent, but is really illusory-like, movie-like, and a 'playground' or 'battleground' for Wills that have varied intentions. They consist of duality, and duality disguised as singularity.

Duality - A concept of mutually arising and complementary 'observations of processes'.

Jacob - also later known as 'Is ra el', is a patriarch of the Israelites and a figure in Abrahamic religions.

Patrons and Customers - Those who are inside of an illusory-like spell, yet do not see, or want to see themselves as so.

Trucker Seraphim - refers to celestial beings appearing as regular truck drivers.

Waffle House - A metaphor for an unexamined life, a place where even those who consider themselves 'spiritual' end up when they don't question every-thing. Refers to the commonly perceived 'world' the mind may perceive as solid, real, and permanent, but is really illusory-like, movie-like, a 'playground' or 'battleground' for Wills with varied intentions. Waffle House's are structures built of duality, and duality disguised as singularity.

Compassion expressed as force is acceptable roadside conduct.

WHO SAYS A FLAT TIRE ISN'T OF SERVICE?

How is it that blown head gaskets and overheating radiators are of service?

Who says a flat tire isn't your friend? Even swindling, crooked mechanics are of service.

Does this mean we might find ourselves roadside waving our fist at those who've ripped us off?

Damn right it does.
Why?

Because force is a torque wrench, working best when ego gets out of the way. No longer spineless before swarthy, more aggressive drivers; we choose to drive the flow's ethical odometer of conscience, and its blurred signpost of anger. We travel within the National Park Adventure in Airstream Signature and Classic models for novelty.

Knowing who and what we are, we open the windows so surprise stays in high gear.

Embracing street smart responses, yawn-worthy trips become journeys... where actions and reactions, pedal on metal or screeching brakes are part of the experience, and in service.

Our soul-body Airstreams are manifestations of choice made at the crossroad of temporal reality. Peering from the window of metallic caravans, trance-state travels are not mistaken for the Absolute. Trailer's have limited lifespan; our decisions... transient road hazards.

Pain and pleasure, intensity of shape, form, color, sound, texture, and so-called spirit world souls are but eddies in the road's soft shoulder. Even the higher ascended spirits driving the finest Airstream Classic Editions can be found on wooden blocks. They only seem 'higher' because we don't usually see them broken down, nor are we privy to how they afforded such luxury. They too experience events looking nothing like service, but are.

The inflamed ego denies that serving events are advantageous. Because of this, only adventurous souls who base jump from the Absolute soar beyond belief. This is the place where serving results in more powerful roadway adventures. The trade-off? Such travels within the phenomenal plane are often shortened.

Regardless of make and model, the side of the road transports personalities from one life to another, from rivers to flooded plains, birth to death and birth again. The higher-self dictates its roles, such as stepping into the Airstream; while the small-self makes decisions like left or right turns at intersections.

Hands on the wheel, we play our part. Admitting our choice, we embrace consequences and drive as powerful gusts! We're in the driver's seat, having taken power back from cumulus ego who'd prefer we forgot our gift. We laugh and turn the radio up as we peel out on social engineering schemes, make roadkill of obstinate beliefs, and dump septic tanks on mental maps that never explored the territory.

Embracing choice brings our responsibility to view. Here, even the most clever soul finds blame inconvenient. Removing victimhood, everything's of service to higher-self, no matter how unfortunate it seems through driver-seat eyes.

But what if our country's stolen, our favorite eatery plowed to build condos, our religion revealed to be a control system, our parental attachment to trusted institutions poisoned?

Well, it still is... anything we do in reaction is in service to all!

With one foot in and out of the RV, the Absolute-self chooses its experience, which isn't always expressed in ways entranced bystanders think polite tourists should act.

Pulling over, we walk outside and strike a pose. Strained arm and tire-jack a'wavin we declare;

"Body-souls have many worthy Airstream models! Being part of creation and cool with impermanence, power fills its need - all while being in service to others. Small-self fused with Absolute, I drive into flow's current, actions powering movement, regardless of an obvious result. Here on the road... anger is want in dissatisfaction, a game piece for those unattached to its temporary suggestion of 'subject and object's desire.'"

Pull over at the auto shop to price out metaphorical fable parts;

Airstream/Trailers/RV/Recreational Vehicle - A metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Belief - The word 'belief' is specifically identified as representing thoughts, thought-forms (larger belief-systems with sigilized symbology), grander egregore belief systems with servitor characteristics, and the super-entranced god-form belief systems that build powerful reflections of inflamed ego while minimizing that particular soul (or group of souls) ability to become present in no-thought and no-mind.

Entranced/Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Journey/Roadway/Road/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Maps - A 'fractal singularity' where all things are overlapped, including but not limited to any experience, concept, object, time, distinction, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process. Used as a term to form contrast for the metaphor 'Territory'.

National Park - Analogous to the 'perception of duality'. The 'National Park' has a special connotation that illustrates the beauty of that which is not usually considered acceptable or 'that of a spiritual nature'. Still, the term is an emboldened word that speaks of peace in a place that is usually considered 'chaos' (a concept that is most often misdefined and ignores the essence that all motion is 'caused' by Will.)

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Window/Windshield - A metaphor of the field of perception that our own and others journey's are perceived. The window is partially characterized by the 'brain' (process of observing) AND the temporal (see def) energy which the brain subjectively interprets into its own 'reality'.

Purpose hangs out in reflections

IN ALL THE REARVIEW MIRRORS

The more we want the end of the road to come, the further it recedes.

That's because we're co-creators and enablers of our Airstream travels. The very desire for the trip's end keeps it lubed n' tuned. Our higher-self will always dream. Only the color and texture of its overalls change.

What?
'Where's the highway's exit?'

Well... we find it in the now - several steps outside the RV where larger purpose loses its gravitas. There, purpose beyond the present means no-thing, as the suspension of disbelief polishes our shiny metal shells. In that reflection, we know journey's are illusory-like. To remove them is a dead-end adventure. So our small-self's Will continues to drive. Its travels are seated in the Absolute and found between thoughts. Underneath, the rumbling engine of presence powers the gears of choice, phaithe, possibility, and flow.

Purposeless at Birth, the Manufacturing Line

As children, we were present. We played in the trailer cupboards and skipped along the rest stop paths. There was no need for extraneous 'purpose'. Years and journeys rolled by, where unquestioned guides of Tradition™, Religion™, Science™, and false integrity became obscuring billboards. We found ourselves at truck stops, lamenting, 'What's the purpose of being here?', which reinforced the lack of presence by asking the question.

Remembering and returning to those earlier times, the need for certainty and security evaporates like spilled gas.

The Addiction to Purpose - Adrenaline High of Hitting the Road with a Destination

Truck drivers, retirees in RV's, and vacationers who must have purpose are attached to the belief that spirit resides in the trance of time & space. They assign worth to illusion and kneel by the tire-jack of unneeded judgment. They speak with upturned nose, grumbling, "Those without purpose are aimless, without god, without direction"... yet it's they who are hitting the brakes against flow at the crossroads of Tao Blvd and Ashram Lane.

So it is with visors down, those subscribing to the necessity of purpose aren't present, although they swear they are.

Fear disguised as dismissal, passengers shake their fists at the consideration. Being a change-maker remains 'higher' in their eyes as long as they don't have to realize it's their small-selves making that choice. And while a purposeful Airstream soul can achieve much, when off road, what exactly becomes of this 'much'? To be present is to be in charge of purpose, and any driver out of presence is only partially here. A soul with unexamined purpose ceases to journey to the extent of its privilege. Having not driven into its sovereign playground, the unquestioned assumption of purpose continues to travel as if worth and value need to be acquired at the next eatery. Yet, for those residing in the present, it no longer has that weight.

If at roadside or intersections it's said, 'This experience... this or that life is pointless', we know we're pointing out the belief that life must have purpose to have value. This disconnects the trailer - for actual worth and value wholly inhabit the present, without being defined by it.

Still, others 'life purpose' (or its absence) is rarely ours to judge, something to believe or disbelieve... for its hanging air-freshener is one of consent and choice.

Is it wrong to drive a Winnebago? Is it a sign of righteousness to own a Fleetwood?

Anyone, or any institution begging the need for 'purpose' is entranced with the rearview mirror's reflection. Lost in duality, even the self-described 'elite' in the best Airstreams ascribe the purpose driven label of 'useless eater' to others. Here we see it residing in the manipulative roadside myths of maleficent sourcery on Route 66.

Who can instruct one of their purpose? A waiter? A drive-through marriage pastor? How could they know? It's curious how some deny purpose's rightful owner, as it's always been our own to play with in the confines of clocks and highways traveled.

Purpose and Trance, The Road Moves Beneath as We Continue Above

Use of windshield wipers reveals purpose to have objects, relationships, and experiences of duality. By spraying our windshield washer fluid, the pursuit meets the present, which may or may not be welcome by adjacent ego-swollen passengers. Sitting in the driver's seat, we see some dreams demanding other dreams to stop dreaming... so as to perpetuate their trance. What a clever reminder to the non-present that it 'may not be enough' if examined! Where there has to be purpose, flow and joy disconnects. The outraged are lost in shared ego... having never questioned the perception of time, nor the source of its belief. Attaching purposes trailer to worth, their RV is unwilling to be parked in new campgrounds, and a symptom of not being in mastery, not being present, and not being aligned with Absolute-self.

When present, we're not obligated to purpose. It simply is the intersection of choice.

As if we need a purpose to be!

When sneaky egos become less inflamed... it's clear that the present isn't just for dogs, trees, rocks, supernovas, and galaxies!

With & Without Purpose in the Flow State, Traffic Jams are simply 'Deeper Trances within the Dream'

We drive to the place where it doesn't matter that we don't matter. Here, there's no attachment, free from spells of ridiculous burden - like, 'We've got to go to the South Rim, because anyone who hasn't has never lived'.

Expecting high revving egos, and smoldering remnants of our own arrogance to have trouble accepting our decision, we exit the bumper to bumper traffic. Smiling, we take a picture of that not mattering as well. We're Airstreams unconcerned with reflecting others light.

Departing from the gridlock doesn't mean we're not driving. On the freeways side road, we find ourselves coasting past the congestion. Creating purpose, rather than being created by it is the act of the flow traveler. Now is our map and territory. High beams on the Absolute, we establish a purposeful present, no longer bound to time. Outside the bottleneck, we don't experience illusion, but an illusory-like journey. Our travels reside in the playground. How we perceive the Body-Soul Airstream determines whether we explore the glory of pain and pleasure, or the mediocre trip of suffering and ignore-ance.

Wind in our whiskers we declare;

"Purpose doesn't define me. I define purpose, and that's only if I choose. It's not that I do or don't have purpose, it's that the very concept is foreign to my sovereignty. My worth is not contingent on purpose."

Climbing into the driver's seat again, we're Airstream Souls in the Tao of Choice.

Sightsee the metaphors;

Absolute - Although the essential nature of what we temporarily and for convenience sake label 'Absolute-self', the term itself ultimately defies being captured by words, for words are the symptom of imagination and consent. Here, we use this term to allude to the terms 'no-mind' and 'the present' (as defined here). The Absolute-self is used to describe the clarity and vantage where the filters and templates of perception do not interfere with 'knowing' (as opposed to the transient distinctions of 'knowledge'). See 'Smaller-Self'.

Airstream/RV/Shiny Metal Shell/Trailer - Although an Airstream is an aluminum travel trailer, it is used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul. (Same as 'R.V.' and 'Trailer'). The 'Airstream' is a metaphor for the 'human experience'. Whether you 'remember' having made the choice 'to be here' makes no difference to the condition. Only when you are completely in the 'now' can you come to terms.

Duality - A concept of mutually arising and complementary 'observations of processes'.

Ego - 'Ego' is transient (like a gust of wind). When attempting to capture it, it becomes clear it's not really any-thing... more of an attachment to a reflection. The 'ego' is neither said 'to exist' nor 'not to exist' from the Absolute vantage, while it is usually labeled as that which 'exists' from a relative perception (which all perception is).

End of the road - A phrase that alludes to a desire for a particular dualistic experience to end, as if that alone will prevent all other further experiences that the soul may encounter 'after'.

Higher-self - Although the essential nature of what we temporarily and for convenience sake label 'Absolute-self', the term itself ultimately defies being captured by words, for words are the symptom of imagination and consent. Here, we use this term to allude to the terms 'no-mind' and 'the present'.

Highway/Road/Roadside - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Illusory-like - Used to denote that the strict definition of 'illusion' is not adequate to fully describe in normally used temporal words (note: all words are temporal). In this case, the word illusion infers not the typical 'magic' trick or optical (5 sense) deception, but speaks to the dissimilarity of the essential nature with thought created creations, and the inherent lack of questioning regarding which source is the base for the other.

Journey - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Map - A 'fractal singularity' where all things are overlapped, including but not limited to any experience, concept, object, time, distinction, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

No-thing - A term that signifies the word is actually a compound statement. In this case, 'nothing' originally refers to 'no thing' - where a 'thing' is defined as any experience, personality, concept, object, distinction, time, category or section of matter or energy, symbol (including letters and numbers), whether simple or complex that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Overalls - An item of clothing that represents the aspects of the personality that are thought of as being the real you, but are nothing but symptoms of an experience.

Phaithe - A term replacing the currently mis-defined word and concept spelled 'faith'. A term used to express reality from a 'Playground' perspective. Phaithe knows nothing and is free to detach and create, as contrasted to the now contorted version of the word 'faith' which has been bent to be synonymous with 'belief' or 'belief system'.

Playground - The term used to describe the optimal experience of duality. This Playgoundia is the 'place' and 'vantage' of having a mastery over the relative dualistic world, and walking in the peace of the 'Absolute' (see def).

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought.

South Rim - A scenic overlook with cliffs and colorful peaks for viewing the Grand Canyon.

Thought - From the absolute vantage, the first distinction is thought, and can be described as sound (many couch the distinction this way..."God Spoke and there was Light"). The first thought is 'sound', sound 'vibrates', vibrations are 'energy' that 'glows' to 'the process of observing' (subjectively interpreted as light). Light forms shapes, colors, angles, numbers, letters. 'Energy' is merely consciousness in movement, and resides in the relative playground of duality.

™- Any word that ends with '™' - refers to the commodification, inversion, financialization, and distortion of a useful trance state vantage of perceiving and knowing, into one that does not serve its original purpose.

Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception. The trance state occurs 'every-where'; with the exception of no-mind, no-thought, and the present.

Truck drivers, retirees in RV's, and vacationers - Those who are inside of an illusory-like spell, yet do not see, or want to see themselves as so.

Windshield Wipers - Represent the consequent act of choice that seeks to REMOVE levels of trance state.

Winnebago and Fleetwood - two brands of RV manufacturers. The comparison asks the reader to imagine variations of what are considered be-ings.

We've 'been' in the present, we can and do return. Use the wipers to see our essential self never left.

THE LONELY RV

Kaleidoscope sunflowers line the road as we imagine our body a shiny RV.

As Airstream Souls, we drop by roadway attractions, asking ourselves, "Do we have the nerve to venture out, or is it just too comfortable here?" Yearning for a different romp, we used to scan old travel guides, sometimes seeking exits on overpasses. Indeed, when the vantage of our essential-self and small-self was hazy, our trance folded relative maps so they'd look like absolute territories. Picnic'n on the railroad we clung to life & death. Seat-belted to fear, we parked too close, pretending we didn't know why the doors wouldn't open.

Having once been outside the RV, we wondered why we remained behind the wheel. Lead-footing, no story got us there. The noisy clicking of dashboard clocks and roadway reflectors had to be ultimately unreal. Consenting to suggestions in language and thought, tapping our fingers, we lamented, "If we could only have one foot in, and one foot out of the vehicle, we wouldn't need memories."

Fortunately, rooting around in the glovebox finally un-nestled the 10[∞] Mile Maintenance Plan. Under cab light, it was clear we'd driven in and out of the trance many times. Thumbing through, we knew we'd do it again... when we chose. Realizing we'd been there, could always go there, and were there, we asked, 'How can anybody be present with us if we're NOT there?'

Where's 'there'?

Well, it's a huge National Park... with soul-trailers stretched to an infinite horizon.

So now we pull over at the timeless-view lookout, where all the honking and swerving loses substance. There, we re-discover the road to exaggerate the mind being stuck behind the windshield, a thought-process seeing its rearview reflection and thinking it themselves. Freeing ourselves now, riveted hypnosis meets its crowbar. Words as dust... no-mind emerges from intoxicated visions of being the lonely RV. Wipers engaged, tired thoughts are swiped away - for time and distinctions are not us. When our breath fogs the window, we adjust the seat. The real 'us' cruises above the blurred landscape of salvation, saving ourselves.

We smile at soul amnesia, for memories no longer color the creation process. Here, time and dread evaporates... except from the self-appointed ego-ensemble known as the Managers of the Tourist Control System. As we declare the journey 'a simple road trip', they plead for us to continue the lore. Peeling out, another chain link breaks as the stuffed Jackalope is tossed in front of another driver. Windows open, our small-self is lucidly seen as the mysterious rabbit/half antelope itself! Behind us the avoidant skidding and resulting gridlock occurs in time, the impermanent traffic trance. Speeding away, its reflection shrinks.

Within the park, there's many ways out - yet the best is to stay 'in'. Trailblazing, we smirk, returning to what we were and are. Present, we laugh at the certainty that our Airstream is all that is. We spring clean the RV's soul, the 'new agreement' having vistas only prior seen through dirty windows. Parked in essential nature, we're cool with our overalls getting holes, as we now drive on and off-road, expanding perception... or removing it entirely. The 'Airstream' is the body-soul, while landscapes are experiences created by other Wills. Considering 'How creation and destruction operates' reveals the traffic of our larger and smaller-self's reflection in the narratives we pass. Trailers, cottonwood, stream beds, and Joshua Tree ghosts are sometimes paired to an ego's desire, calling to other souls to assist in solidifying the dream.

RV's, flowers, clouds, and humans are highway intersections. Changing gears, the soul-ego disconnects its experiential hitch from motion, thoughts, feelings, and stories. Our Airstreams glide as we gaze at each traveler radiating our 'light', while reflecting others. On this trip, blooms shimmer in as many soul-beings as one is willing to see. Each bud, seed, and leaf blows in small-self wind... some detaching from branches while others cling in reflective obstinance.

We're on a journey of the soul, no matter how lopsided the driver's seat. Wind and sun on our faces... we declare;

"I'm the consentor to maps and the co-creator of territories. I'm the driver - free of memory attachments, regardless of whether they're from this lifetime's travels or another."

This vision reverberates in the center console as we pull over to take walks on paths of surprise.

Footsteps!

Feel and hear them going in and out of our RV.

Root around under your seat for metaphoric quarters;

Absolute - Only the space 'between thoughts' can embrace the Absolute. The 'Absolute' is placed in the context of 'absolute and its subordinate relative'. This does not imply a dualistic relationship, as the 'Absolute and relative' are not mutually arising (see def).

Airstream/Trailers/RV/Recreational Vehicle - used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Clock - The constructs and unexamined language and assumptions that imply that time is not created by thought.

Creations - A thought 'created' concept implying its own existence and the solidity of time when there is none.

Dirt Road/Off Roothing - a place and method of traveling where the soul sees itself as transient, views its experience within the confines of 'trance', and approaches its being as residing within a playground.

Entranced/Trance - Used to indicate any-thing, or any thought, belief system, or perception that is symptom of small-self. We do not ascribe value or worth to such state, just varying levels of awareness that accompany its depth. The trance state is associated with word, spells, mind, ego, things, belief, thought-forms, egregores, god-forms, creation, and perception.

Fence - The transition point between the vantage of the Absolute and the perception of the relative (see def). Within the imagery we use a variety of fences to symbolize the choice and recognition of their dance.

Jackalope - Any-thing' that is created by thought and its component desire.

Journey/Roadtrip - A metaphor for the experiences within the temporal distinctions of thought, space, and time. The beginning and end of these experiences may be labeled with the transient distinctions of life and death. Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process. Same as 'Travels', 'Trips', and 'Time'.

Managers of the tourist control system - is a phrase which represents a singular Will and a universal Will that engages in higher rebellion. He uses techniques that reinforce his and others delusions, including kabbalistic creation, illuministic magic, thought control, language manipulation, the support of illusion, misperception, and the encouragement of self-blinding behaviors.

National Park - Analogous to the 'perception of duality'. The 'National Park' has a special connotation that illustrates the beauty of that which is not usually considered acceptable or 'that of a spiritual nature'. Still, the term is an emboldened word that speaks of peace in a place that is usually considered 'chaos' (a concept that is most often misdefined and ignores the essence that all motion is 'caused' by Will.)

No-mind - The state where thoughts may or may not occur, yet the observer embraces their choice, placing their focus and attention according to their own desire.

Overalls - An item of clothing that represents the aspects of the personality that are thought of as being the real you, but are nothing but symptoms of an experience.

Perception - Defined as the process of observing that occurs only within dualistic, relative playgrounds. Perception is created by filters and templates that guide the observer into belief systems of consent. Perception is maintained by consent, self-created desire, the process of 'in-form-ing' through 'other' souls 'light' creations and Will (conjuring spell-craft), thought, thought-forms, egregores, godforms), and agreed upon tuned resonance and categorization within the imagined parameters of distance, time, and space. Defined as the process of observing that occurs only within dualistic, relative playgrounds. Perception is created by filters and templates that guide the observer into belief systems of consent.

Playground - The term used to describe the optimal experience of duality. This Playground is the 'place' and 'vantage' of having a mastery over the relative dualistic world, and walking in the peace of the 'Absolute' (see def).

Rearview Mirror - All interpretations of senses, as well as thought-forms (see def) including scientific theories, social conventions, religious and political dogmas, that we incorrectly perceive and believe to exist outside our own and others thought creation.

Reflective and Radiant Light - The subjective sensation and interpretation an observer may make when information is delivered from other thought-forms (see def). This 'light' may be subjectively experienced as 'red, green, blue, yellow, orange, purple, indigo, and other frequency sensations the mutual wills have consciously or unconsciously agreed upon'. 'Light' is a sensation, the resulting feeling one gets when receiving the Will of another creator. When considered reflective, it represents the will of another fractionalized Will. When considered radiant, it represents your own fractionalized Will.

Relative - A term used as a literary device to indicate all 'things' that are found in duality, including viewpoints that suggest yin/yang mutually arising concepts where it's inappropriate to do so. The relative is always arrived at from the vantage of the 'brain' (also referred to as the 'Stetson' in some stories).

Roadway/Travels - Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Road - are a metaphor for any journey, or set of perceptions fit into a framework of time and space. Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Seatbelt - A metaphor for self-enforced ideas and behaviors used to reinforce belief systems.

Small-self - A term used as a literary device to indicate the transient perception of both the natural ego and the inflamed ego. The 'small-self' perceives through the templates created by itself and other Wills.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain').

Temporal - That which is related to the creations of the mind, thought, and the thought process. Temporal constructions are never considered 'spiritual'. All duality, all 'things', including vibration, energy, matter, images, angles, numbers, including 'souls' are considered temporal.

Thought - From the absolute vantage, the first distinction is thought.

Time - A symptom of thought and conjured distinctions, engendered from higher Wills, and co-created by the unquestioned premise of complicit observers.

Truck stop trinkets - Distractions

Wipers - A metaphor for anything removing or minimizing perceptive filters, including belief systems. The consequent act of choice that seeks to REMOVE levels of trance state.

10[∞] Mile Maintenance Plan - A phrase alluding to the intermittent, yet disciplined plan to regularly ground oneself, give thanks, forgive oneself and others, reconnect to nature, and inspect/adjust/remove incongruent belief systems.

It's OK to unbuckle our seatbelts... souls come and go, Stumble into the repair shop to know 'life and death' as they are.

AIRSTREAMS COME AND GO

Wet soil fragrance fills the air as we approach the Airstream. Stepping in, we relax. With every clock-tick, deepening solitude envelopes our being. Here, we drift into daydream, where presence splashes lucidity upon life and death. In this place... our cologne, obsessions, successes, flashbacks, pains, desires, unwashed dishes, and RV bob in yesterday's flood. The torrent moves, and what we thought we were is washed away.

We sit, as if existing before our bodies did, as if our trailers were going to the place we came from 'after we die'. In the dream-trance, we believe there's a freeway called 'existence', which tempts ourselves to fret of non-existence. Questioning all assumptions, the flood washes away the dashboard of perception, sweeping us into flow where neither existence nor non-existence swim.

We ponder, 'If memory degrades like a cheap Heartland, isn't it fair to say some RV's are better off not driving? And because I recall I was once a rodeo clown, does it mean I did or didn't exist? If I can't remember driving Route 66 prior to birth, does that assure I was never on that road?'

We mull it over; 'Yeah, the universe records the giddy up'n soul into new pastures. Even pot-belly pigs have ego and personality.'

Gazing at crows out the window, boot wearing bipeds aren't alone in feeling alive.

'Just who's telling us what it's like to be dead?' we wonder. For if afterlife has personality and wears a Stetson, not really occurring 'after'... there'll be many more tears before returning to mastery. At our death, the hobo-like 'i' ceases, and the real 'I' goes back to the state before being born - apart from the whisky-goggle view of birth and death coming and going.

Cracking a beer, we know nothing lasts forever, and that's a sweet, sweet thing. The Airstream as the energetic body fades against the backdrop of the illusory-like limbo we once gave permission to hide from. Heck, a few times we were having such a kick we had to force ourselves to get out at the truck stop.

Reclining, we imagine the last time we thought something was going to 'last forever'. Through the windshield are many signposts. But despite the inclination to think they're for safety; every word on every Stop Sign, No U Turn, Right Turn Only, and One Way leads us from home. Each is an eddy in the playground journey – nothing more. No right or wrong... 'rules' are created by ourselves. Because we don't remember, we ascribe their power to other Wills. Smirking, there's a realization we've been obeying the traffic signs we constructed. Commanded by stop signs and obeying roadside words and shapes, the sturdier the trailer appeared. We sometimes felt our Airstream more solid than ourselves!

'Was it our souls aim to take a trip? Perhaps we're just learning to play, but don't want to live forever.'

As emancipated drivers, we know our ventures don't last – it's the unleashed ego that buys into that slot machine. Only through consent are we lost in the map. In the end, we stumble across our own rest-stop graffiti, which reminds us to return home because the present isn't going anywhere.

There's always a door handle. Using it to master duality, we place one foot inside the Airstream and one foot out. Cracked open, the attachment to 'afterlife' is a symptom of believing there's a life and death.

As an Airstream Soul, we play with time – coming and going. A dent in our RV, a bumper smashed... no-thing is accidental. By wear and tear or junkyard crusher, things are created and destroyed. All by intention of the sneaky creator god in all of us.

We float above the flood, or in it. Our choice.

Driving by the junkyard to check out discarded vehicles, we contemplate how each is a real & metaphoric attachment cast away. We no longer wonder what it's like to be dead. It's simply going 'back' to the place before we were born.

Taking the wheel... we then let go, declaring,

"Any belief an event or feeling may last forever is now uncreated, brought to the present, and driven into the junkyard in a gentle, light hearted way. I now grab my glasses from the console; smile, close the door and walk away. It is done."

Metaphoric Mechanics

Airstream/RV/Trailer - is used here as a metaphor for the physical and energetic 'body' that is sometimes identified as body and soul.

Clock - The constructs and unexamined language and assumptions that imply that time is not created by thought.

Driver - A term that alludes to the 'Soul', defined here as the temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought (not necessarily created by the human 'brain'). See 'Soul' for more description.

Flood/Torrent - A metaphor alluding to the Absolute (see def) and the essential nature (see def). Also referred to as 'Torrent'. All of these descriptions do not mutually arise, nor do they have polar equivalents. This is used as a metaphor for the Tao, the Flow, and Groove.

Heartland - A brand of motorhome known for poor quality.

'i' and 'I' (lower case) and (upper case) - Denotes the illusory-like self (or 'selves'). The lowercase 'i' in the statement 'i' always represents a conjured entity or 'entities' (see; conjure). Also see You and 'you', 'we' below. 'i' and "I" are SMTS (see def of Subconscious multi-term suggestion) of the word 'eye'. Uppercase 'I', when used as a comparison with a lowercase 'i' is asking the viewer to contemplate the 'i' as duality and 'I' as the overarching Absolute which may utilize duality as a playground state.

Road/Route 66 - are a metaphor for any journey, or set of perceptions fit into a framework of time and space. Any combination in any order of any-thing or things including time, space, concepts, experiences, objects, distinctions, categories or sections of matter or energy that 'exist' solely as a symptom of the thought process.

Seatbelt - represent attachments to things, whether in the form of events, objects, ideas and beliefs, and perceptions.

Signs - May refer to activities, things, habits, distractions, language with built in deception, and the commonly defined 5 senses that can act as barriers to understanding and embracing the essential nature.

Soul - The temporal energy body component of the temporal matter body. A false dichotomy term used to imply a 'spiritual' side of the 'body' when in fact both are constructions of thought Stetson - Used as an analogy for the 'physical brain'. The Stetson is a cowboy hat manufactured by the John B. Stetson Company. Also considered 'The process of observing' and 'thought process'.

Whisky goggles - A metaphoric phrase that speaks to all interpretations of senses, as well as thought-forms (see def) including scientific theories, social conventions, religious and political dogmas, that we incorrectly perceive and believe to exist outside our own and others thought creation.

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

