

The Centre for Scottish Studies at the University of Guelph

The Centre for Scottish Studies at the University of Guelph is the largest cluster of scholars undertaking Scottish research outside Scotland.

The University's McLaughlin Library holds the largest collection of Scottish records outside the United Kingdom, of which our students and broader members of the community make extensive use.

With scholars working in all periods of Scottish history, and with graduates who form part of a world-wide alumni network, the Centre's mission is to support original research into Scotland's past and present, to support teaching at all levels, and to nurture strong links with and beyond the Scottish community in North America.
