

“Time never stops”

Rev. James Lee

The days have grown much shorter. When I arrived at the church for early morning prayer, the surroundings were dark, and the bright moonlight was illuminating the building. Although I had been feeling the change bit by bit, it feels like just the other day that I was walking toward the church while watching the sun rise. Yet, here I was already, driving down a dark highway. Looking at the full moon that had not yet set, I truly realized that the days had shortened. Soon, that moon will begin to fade bit by bit until it completely vanishes. Then, another moon will rise.

I cannot believe how fast time flies day by day. It might be too early to say that summer is completely over, but as we look ahead to September, we endure this final stretch of heat. When living the exact same routine every single day, it feels as though the world has ground to a halt. Walking the same path, meeting the same people, doing the same work, eating the same food, and returning home at a set time to wash up and sleep—and just like that, another day is gone. Sometimes, I feel pathetic, wondering what on earth I am doing with my life. Of course, there are also times when it feels rewarding and proud. There are times when I praise myself. When something brings me joy, my heart overflows, and my steps back home feel incredibly light. Even when we are rejoicing, grieving, feeling bored, or spending our time in laziness, time absolutely never stops. It feels as though it paused for just a brief moment, but a day passes, a month passes, and a year flies by. The storage room that I put off organizing, promising myself to handle it the next day, still sits there half-done as it welcomes a brand-new year. Once today passes, that time will never return to us again. Even when I lie down on the sofa to indulge in a moment of laziness, I suddenly snap back to reality and force myself to stand up. Perhaps this is due to a sense of urgency regarding this time that will never come back.

From God’s perspective, He might say He treats us all fairly, but from our perspective, it never feels fair. To some people, He has granted an abundance of time, while for others, there is only a fleeting amount of time left. Therefore, we must be able to do our absolute best with the time we are given. We must maintain a sense of urgency for the mission entrusted to us. This is because we never know when our Lord will return and hold us accountable. How much time do I have left to fulfill the mission given to me? There is no way to know. For time will never stop for us.
