

Rev. James Lee

There is a vision for our church that I have dreamed of for a long time—a church centered around small groups. I have always envisioned a church where the unique roles given to each individual function beautifully. I believe ministry should never be done out of obligation or coercion, but should be a modern service filled with true joy and delight. At the center of this vision, small groups play a vital role.

When people hear the term 'small group,' they might think of an unfamiliar or awkward gathering. However, the truth is that we are all already participating in small group activities right now; we simply need to do them better. It is my sincere hope that everyone can experience and enjoy abundance through these small groups.

Currently, our small groups are broadly divided into two main categories: Ministry Teams and the 'Ye-Dalm' (Resembling Jesus) Community. The Ministry Teams are communities gathered specifically to fulfill church ministries, while the 'Ye-Dalm' Community is a fellowship focused on spiritual sharing beyond formal service. Although it may still feel unfamiliar, I hope our Ministry Teams will truly become vibrant small group gatherings for service. I pray that our ministry is not driven simply by top-down instructions, but by the hearts God gives us—where we voluntarily create and embrace our given roles for His church. Additionally, it would be even better if this time allowed us to share our lives and reflect on ourselves through our ministry. My hope is that we do not serve out of necessity, but with a clear confirmation of our calling from God.

The other major pillar is the 'Ye-Dalm' Community. Recognizing the limitations of traditional 'Mokjang' (house churches) or district meetings, I envisioned a transformed small group model. However, as these gatherings are currently not very active, I am praying and seeking new ways to revitalize them. If the large group gathering is where all congregants come together to worship, praise, and pray, then a small group is a process where a few individuals gather at their preferred time, share what they desire, and become one. Whether it is Bible reading, sermon discussion, devotionals, hiking, golf, table tennis, traveling, photography, or cooking, it can be any gathering where people share common interests. I hope these become small groups that share Christ's love and play a vital part in uniting the body of Christ.

God desires for us to grow further. He wants us to spread His fragrance as mature Christians. The church must change, and that change begins within our hearts and minds. We must shift our focus to be God-centered, looking through His eyes. I pray that we can all look forward to the future God is opening for our church and journey together in prayer.
