"What does it mean to walk together?"

Rev. James Lee

When you think of a lifelong companion to share your life with, who comes to mind? Most people think of their beloved wife or husband. They are the spouses God has paired with us to spend the rest of our lives together. I always keep deep in my heart the pastor's words to stay together through thick and thin, in sickness and in health, until our hair turns as white as green onion roots.

Yet, some grandmothers in the countryside call this loving, lifelong relationship a "lifelong enemy." When another couple is asked to kiss, someone might say, "Couples don't do that with each other." There are many bittersweet stories about how the closest relationship can turn into the most difficult one. Perhaps that is what marriage is.

After living together for quite a while, you begin to understand why your spouse acts the way they do. That brings comfort. You can communicate with just a glance. This is precisely why the marital relationship requires even more care and attention. We must realize that because we know each other so well, we can easily hurt each other's feelings. I hope we can live as great lifelong companions by respecting, loving, and showing consideration for our beloved wives and husbands.

God has also placed other people by our side to accompany us through life. They are our companions in faith. The members of our church must become these companions in faith. We use the word "member" (or "part of the body") to describe church congregants. This means we are parts of one body. The body as a whole is made up of these parts. For the body to be healthy, every single part must be healthy. If one part of the body falls ill, the entire body suffers. If that illness is an incurable disease like cancer that takes away life, it ultimately claims the life of the entire body. Therefore, we must care for one another well so that all our members remain healthy.

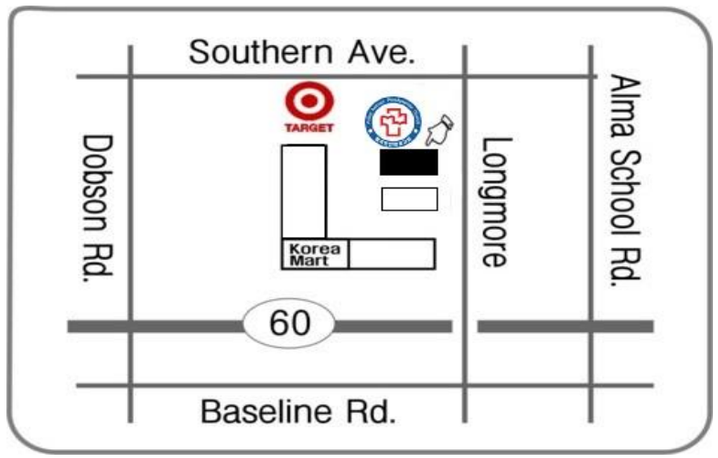

While this is a passive way to keep our body healthy, a more active approach is to join together when each member strives to work hard for the Kingdom of God. Being together means supporting their passion, showing interest, and cooperating with them. There should be no lone wolves in the church. It must not be a place moved by a single person. The church requires every member to work together.

God sent Eve as a helper to the lonely Adam. This was because humans are imperfect and cannot handle things alone. At times, we can all be Adam, and at other times, we can be Eve. Our role may be that of Adam, faithfully responding to God's calling, or it may be supporting and helping those who are faithfully serving. I hope we can become a single body that praises, encourages, and builds up the Kingdom of God together.
